When the property which is the subject of a Chancery suit is above the value of 1000l., the higher scale of fees is payable; but when it does not exceed that amount the lower scale applies. Suits instituted by bill or information are the only suits other than suits by summons originating proceedings in chambers to which the higher scale and lower scale of fees of court apply. The proportion of the numbers on each scale to the whole number varied in a very slight degree in the years 1867-8 and 1866-7, being 82 per cent. in the higher scale, and 18 per cent. on the lower scale in 1867-8, and 82.2 and 17.8 per cent. respectively in 1866-7.

The total number of proceedings, and the total amount of fees collected by stamps in the Office of Records and Writs in each of the years 1867-8 were as follows:

Proceedings in suits by bill or information	21,171
" " on claim	—
" " on summons	1,187
" " in special cases	40
General proceedings	65,130
	87,288
Fees collected in the office by stamps	233,330

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BRIBERY BY A POLITICAL ASSOCIATION—AGENCY OF SUCH ASSOCIATION—SCRUTINY—CORRUPTION BY STRANGERS.—There existed in the town a Conservative and a Liberal association, each of which generally promoted the return of its own candidate, and assisted the registration of its own supporters. The managers of the Conservative Association having circulated addresses and papers issued by the candidate, will be presumed to have done so with his knowledge, or with that of his agents, so as to constitute the association an agent of such candidate, and to make him responsible for any illegal acts of its managers. Amongst other things, the managers of the association paid 5s. to every person who claimed it in respect of time lost in attending the barrister's court at the registration. Several voters claimed and received the amount who had not attended the court: Held to be bribery by the association. Where a person has actually attended the revising barrister's court, either because he was obliged to do so, or because he thought he was obliged to do so, and has actually lost a day's time in attending there, he may be inferred to have taken the compensation honestly and not for his vote. But where nothing has been done to entitle the person to the money, the inference must be that he took it for his vote, and his name would be struck off on a scrutiny. Where an association or a person is tacitly allowed by a candidate, or with the candidate's knowledge, to promote his election, that is some evidence to show that he is an agent. And where a body acts in support of a candidate, the assistance being a substantial benefit, and he does not hold them off or repudiate them, he must accept the consequence, and be responsible for their malpractices. On a scrutiny, every voter who is shown to have been corrupted, although corrupted by the opposite side to that on which he voted, and even though the bribe be received from a stranger, will be struck off. The object of a scrutiny is to ascertain, without regard to who corrupted this man or that, what is the majority of uncorrupted voters, and whether there is a majority for any one who has not rendered himself by personal misconduct incapable of standing: (Taunton Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 169. Blackburn, J.)

A return has been issued, showing, with respect to each of the Parliamentary cities and boroughs in England and Wales, the population in 1861; the total number of electors on the register now in force, distinguishing those entitled to vote as householders under the Representation of the People Act 1867, from those entitled to vote as 10l. occupiers; and the number of electors who voted at the last general election. The total number of electors on the register was 1,203,170, and the number who voted 825,519.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

POWER—DUE EXERCISE OF—MORTGAGE—COMPOUND INTEREST.—By a deed of disentail and re-settlement of certain real estates power was given to the father and son, and for the son if he should survive, to mortgage the estate to raise such sums as might be requisite to redeem several prior mortgages. The father and son exercised their joint power of appointment, creating various charges. The son was the survivor, and he mortgaged the estates to the plaintiffs to secure a sum of 600l. advanced at various times to the grandfather, father, and son, during the lifetimes of the two former, on the faith of an agreement that those sums should be secured to them by a mortgage. Held, that this mortgage was a valid execution of the power, and compound interest allowed as provided for by the prior charges: (Gepp v. Majendie, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 168. V.C.J.)

RIGHT TO BEGIN.—In the case of demurrers, it is the practice of the Court of Common Pleas to let the plaintiff begin: (Roberts v. The Bury Improvement Commissioners, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 173. C.P.)

LIBEL—CHARGE OF INGRATITUDE.—It is libellous, and affords good cause of action as such, to charge another with ingratitude, even though the facts upon which the charge is grounded be stated, and are insufficient to support the charge. So held by the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C.B. and Bramwell, Channell, and Pigott, B.B.) And per Kelly, C.B., to impute untruly pecuniary embarrassment to another, and the inability to purchase a certain property without the aid of a loan from a third party is libellous; even although it be at the same time stated that the loan was afterwards honourably repaid: (Cox v. Lee, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 178. Ex.)

LIBEL OR NO LIBEL.—A judge is only justified in withdrawing the question of "libel or no libel" from the jury in cases where he is clearly of opinion that, if they were to find the matter a libel, their verdict would be set aside by the court above. Per Kelly, C.B.: (Idem.)

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Monday, Oct. 4.

THE METROPOLITAN LAND AND FINANCE COMPANY V. SMITH.

Novel point under the Bills of Exchange Act.

This was an action on a promissory-note for 500l., and a novel point was raised. The action was under the Bills of Exchange Act. Defendant had not applied for leave to appear and defend, but did so on the ground that the action was improperly brought under the particular Act, and the remedy was under the old law.

Benham, on the part of the defendant, submitted that as the action was not brought within six months of the note being payable, there was a particular clause that the proceedings were irregular and must be set aside.

Master JOHNSON referred to the Bill of Exchange Act. The provision was to the effect stated, but he would allow the plaintiffs to amend the writ.

Benham said the writ was bad, and must be set aside and a fresh action brought.

The MASTER held otherwise. He would order the writ to be amended. The writ was not bad.

Marsden, on the other side, objected to costs.

The MASTER ordered an amendment of the writ, and costs to be costs in the cause.

TESTIMONIAL TO JOHN BECKE, ESQ.,

(Solicitor, Northampton.)

On Saturday, Oct. 2, a testimonial consisting of three very handsome silver flower and fruit stands, was presented to John Becke, Esq., for his unwearied exertions for twenty-five years as honorary secretary of the Royal Victoria Dispensary, in this town, of which he was also the originator.

The testimonial was the united gift of the paying members who receive medical assistance from the dispensary, and of the honorary members who subscribed to make up the deficiency of the contributions of the free members.

The Worshipful the Mayor (John Vernon, Esq.) presided, and amongst those present were:—The Mayoress and Miss Becke, the Rev. Sydney Gedge, vicar of All Saints; the Rev. J. T. Browne, vicar of St. Edmund's; the Rev. W. H. F. Robson, vicar of St. Giles's; Major Lumley, C. C. Becke, Esq., Dr. Barr, Philadelphus Jeyes, Esq., John Phipps, Esq., J. P., George Ashdown, Esq., Wm. Moxon, Esq., C. J. Evans, Esq., Thomas L. Cordeux, Esq., S. Walker, Esq., Edward Durham, Esq., Mr. Richard Phipps, Mr. Thomas Pressland, &c., &c.

The Mayor called on the Rev. Sydney Gedge to make the presentation.

The Rev. Sydney Gedge said it was his pleasing duty to offer for Mr. Becke's acceptance the articles they saw before them, the elegance and tastefulness of which would, he hoped, commend themselves as much to him and to his family as it did to him (Mr. Gedge). He had now been for ten years a weekly witness of the beneficial results of the institution which owed its origin to the benevolence and courage, and its increasing prosperity to the care and counsel of Mr. Becke. Mr. Gedge addressed Mr. Becke, and said: I will ask you, sir, to accept this testimonial. It will tell you and your family, not only the tale of our gratitude, but it will tell them this also, that disinterested efforts never in the long run fail to be duly appreciated. It will remind your family when, in the course of Providence you shall be taken from them, that they had a father to whom many in this town were indebted, and will be indebted, under God, for the restoration of health and prolongation of life.

Mr. Becke said: I feel most deeply thankful for the kindness which has dictated the actions of those who have brought me this gift; most deeply sensible am I of the kind and flattering manner in which my services towards the dispensary have been spoken of, and very thankful to all those gentlemen, acquaintances, and friends who have acted with me in the foundation and carrying on of that institution, for the part they have taken in getting up this testimonial, and still more grateful, still more obliged, am I to those free members who, from their own hard earnings, have contributed so large a portion towards it. I have always felt, and do feel, that if the interests of any class become antagonistic to those of the community at large, then the narrower and smaller class must yield its views to the general good. I believe that an institution of this kind, if properly carried on, may be conducted as much to the benefit of the medical men connected with it as to the benefit of the community. It is now twenty-five years since this institution was started, but it is a much longer period since my attention was first called to the question of medical relief for the poor. In this and other towns I have seen the workings of the systems which were in vogue before the idea of a provident medical institution was started. I have known what it was to see industrious, hard-working men going from door to door to beg infirmity tickets when illness was in the house, and when time was of the utmost importance; when prompt attention might have saved much suffering. I have known instances when the bread-winner of the family has been ill, and unable to get letters of admission to the infirmary, he has been content, instead of paying a doctor, to act on the advice of neighbours not more skilled in medicine than himself, or what is infinitely more dangerous, has gone to any quack or uneducated person, who possessed neither the knowledge, training, or experience necessary for the treatment of disease. These were very great evils, and I always felt it would be a very good thing if something could be done to prevent it. I thank you most heartily and sincerely for the handsome gift you have bestowed on me. Valuable as it is for its intrinsic worth, and beautiful as it is in point of artistic skill, I shall value it infinitely more, because it will represent to me the goodwill and esteem of those who have subscribed towards it, and have taken part in presenting it.

The testimonial remained, for several days, at the museum, for the inspection of the subscribers and of the public.

THE HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

The Times gives some particulars as to the progress of the work undertaken by this commission. No less than seventy-three noblemen and gentlemen, possessing valuable collections, have opened them to the inspection of the commissioners; and upwards of thirty corporations, ecclesiastical and lay, have done the same. Offers of assistance have also been made from all quarters. An important collection made by Dugdale has been come-upon, illustrating the history of the ninth and tenth centuries; papers bearing on the Perkin Warbeck episode, letters new to history from Henry VII., Elizabeth of York, Henry VIII., Katharine of Aragon, Cardinal Wolsey, &c., have also been found, as well as a large mass of papers relating to the Gunpowder Plot, quite unknown to the historians. Light is thrown on the reign of William III. by letters of Oresbet and Cardonnel relating to transactions and political events at the Hague and in Denmark, and also by a paper in the handwriting of Lord Halifax, giving an account of various conversations between that nobleman and William III. Here is a trait in the character of the same monarch, from one of Cardonnel's letters to Under-Secretary Ellis, written from the Hague in October 1701, five months before the King's death:

His Majesty's cold wears off more and more, so that we reckon him almost quite recovered, but what I mentioned to you before continues. However, his Majesty endeavours to divert himself as well he can, and goes abroad every day. Yesterday he was a shooting, and afterwards went to a fish dinner at Mr. Vander Esch's. It is a pity his Majesty will not be more governable and temperate in his diet. Should I eat so much, and of the same kind, I dare say I should scarce have survived it so long, and yet I reckon myself none of the weakest constitutions.

There is also a large collection of letters which was seized in the King's cabinet at the battle of Naseby, and brought in great triumph to London, to be perused by both Houses of Parliament. Out of the 300 letters captured by Fairfax, only thirty, which were considered as the most damaging to the King, were ordered to be printed. The remainder, being too much in favour of the unhappy monarch to be made public, were suppressed.

Newly-discovered documents bearing on the last illness of Charles II. confirm the narrative of Father Huddleston as to the conversion of that prince to the Roman Catholic faith. In another collection have been found nearly 100 unpublished autograph letters of Prior, the poet, and double that number from his friend George Stepney, the ambassador, who is buried in Westminster Abbey. In one muniment room there are no less than 5000 private letters from scholars, wits, and politicians in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

DEATH OF EX-PRESIDENT PIERCE.—The death is announced of ex-President Pierce. Franklin Pierce was the son of Benjamin Pierce, a New Hampshire farmer, who distinguished himself in the war of independence. The ex-president was born at Hillsboro' in New Hampshire in Nov. 1804, and was, therefore, nearly sixty-six at the time of his death. He was educated for the Bar, but had not been long in practice when he was elected to the State Legislature. At twenty-nine years of age he was sent to Congress, and remained for four years in the House of Representatives. Resuming then his practice at the Bar, he rose to some eminence. He was offered by General Polk the office of Attorney-General or Secretary of War, but he declined both. When the Mexican war broke out Pierce served as a private soldier in a New England regiment. He received from the President a colonel's commission, and the lawyer soldier distinguished himself in several engagements. After the war Pierce lived in retirement till 1852, when he was nominated for the presidency. He had the support of the party, and was elected. His presidency began March 4, 1853, and ended in 1856, when Mr. Buchanan, the predecessor of Lincoln, came into power. His administration gave very little satisfaction to his party, who were leagued with slavery, and made the most exorbitant demands on the men they put into office. Mr. Pierce was made a judge in 1863. Nathaniel Hawthorne and Professor Stowe were among Pierce's early friends. The celebrated General Jackson thought highly of his administrative capacity, and on his death-bed is reported to have said that the interests of the country could not be in better hands.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

MANSION HOUSE POLICE COURT.

(Before the LORD MAYOR.)

Monday, Oct. 11.

Albert Buchler, twenty-three, a Hungarian, was brought up, on remand, charged with forging and uttering a bill of exchange for 1857. odd.

Mullens, solicitor to the London Bankers' Protection Association, again conducted the prosecution on behalf of the Hungarian Credit Bank.

St. John Wontner, solicitor, for the defence. Mullens formally stated the charge, which was of forging and uttering a bill of exchange for 1800. and upwards upon Messrs. G. and A. Worms, of Antwerp, bankers.

Mr. John Mount, the manager of the English business of the house of Blount and Co., bankers, Paris, said he knew the prisoner. He said he first saw him on the 6th Sept. last, when he called at the bank, and, producing the bill for 1857. odd, asked him if he could give him cash for it. Witness observed that it was not accepted, and that it must be accepted before it could be discounted. He appeared to wish to have the money immediately, and was told that was impossible until the bill was accepted, and that it must be sent to London with that view. He left the bill in the hands of witness. That was on the 6th Sept. and the prisoner called at the bank three or four times between that day and the 9th, when, the bill having been accepted, witness handed him the money, 44,538. odd, for which the prisoner gave him a receipt. On all those occasions the prisoner gave the name of M. De Wolff. Witness did not remember seeing him write the name of De Wolff on the bill, but he represented that he was the payee of the bill.

Being cross-examined, witness said in all probability the indorsement was written in his presence, but he had no recollection of seeing the prisoner write it. As a fact the bill was indorsed before it was sent to London to their correspondents—the London and Joint-stock Bank—for acceptance.

Mr. Emerich Nismits de Nyek (speaking through Mr. Braunmann, an interpreter) said he is secretary to the General Hungarian Credit Bank at Pesth, and knew the prisoner, who was a clerk in the correspondence department of the bank. The prisoner asked for leave of absence for a few days, and that having been granted he left on the 2nd Sept., but never returned. Witness did not see the prisoner again until he was in custody in London. He knew his handwriting. The bill for 1857. odd was written on a printed form used by the bank, and the body of it was in the prisoner's handwriting, as was also the indorsement, "E. De Wolff." It purported to be signed by Antoine Franck and Herman Kaiser, two of the directors of the bank. Witness knew their handwriting well. Neither of the signatures was genuine. They had been imitated with peculiar care, and that purporting to be the signature of Mr. Franck was not written, but traced.

The witness Roth, clerk to Messrs. Worms, in cross-examination, said they frequently accepted bills for the Hungarian Credit Bank; that it was usual for the bank, before a bill was sent for acceptance, to send over a letter of advice; that that was done in this case, and that the letter bore a signature which witness had seen to previous letters of advice.

By Mullens.—Witness acted on that letter, believing it to be genuine.

Wontner, for the defence, submitted that there was no case, inasmuch as, even if the Lord Mayor had jurisdiction in the matter, which he denied, there was no proof that the bill was forged, the evidence on that point resting on the mere belief of a witness. Although the prisoner did not come before the court under circumstances exciting him to much sympathy, still he was a foreigner, and the court would probably not detain him merely on the assumption that, on the question of jurisdiction, the judges might eventually stretch a point in this particular case in favour of a conviction. He cited the case of Reg. v. Gabriel Sans Garrett, 1 Dears. Cr. Cas. Res. founding upon that an elaborate argument in favour of the prisoner, and that a conviction of him by a jury could not be sustained. The simple question, he submitted, was whether Messrs. Blount in discounting the bill for the prisoner were acting as his agents. To bring the prisoner within English jurisdiction it must be shown that the forgery was committed in England, or that the utterance was committed there, with intent to defraud some one in this country. It was clear that the prisoner could not have intended to defraud Messrs. Worms and Co., and that being so he submitted that the bench had no jurisdiction. They could in no sense be said to have been defrauded, nor did they appear there as prosecutors, and if the Hungarian Credit Bank had been defrauded, the Lord Mayor had no jurisdiction.

The LORD MAYOR, after hearing Mullens in reply, on the part of the prosecution, who argued against the applicability of the decision in Garrett's case to that of the prisoner, told Mr. Wontner that though he himself saw a clear difference between the two, he might raise the question on the trial if he thought proper. He intimated his intention to commit the prisoner for trial.

PORTSMOUTH PETTY SESSIONS.

... The Seamen's Clothing Act 1869.

William Way, of Portsea, clothes dealer, was charged by James Hart, a police-constable of the borough of Portsmouth, with having, on the 10th Oct. instant, in his possession and keeping certain seamen's clothing, to wit, a jacket, the property of one James Wallace, a leading stoker in Her Majesty's navy, and then serving on board H.M.S. Inconstant, contrary to the Seamen's Clothing Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 57).

Swainson, of Portsmouth (the Admiralty solicitor), appeared for the prosecution, and Coward, of Portsea, for the defendant.

Coward said that previous to the case being gone into, he had an objection to raise. The Act of Parliament under consideration was a very recent one, and one which affected the interests of a considerable number of persons in this locality, and without going into its merits or demerits, it was a highly penal statute, and must therefore be construed strictly in favour of the defendant.

The Act was passed for the purpose of protecting the clothing and property of seamen in the same way as the clothing and property of soldiers are protected by law, but the statute extended to the clothing and property of seamen only. By the 3rd section the word seaman was interpreted to mean "every person not being a commissioned, warrant, or subordinate officer who was in or belonged to Her Majesty's Navy, and was borne on the books of any one of Her Majesty's ships in commission," &c. He contended that the term "subordinate officer" was synonymous with the term "petty officer" as generally used. If this was not the meaning of the term, his friend who represented the Admiralty might probably be able to afford a definition. A leading stoker was clearly a "petty" or "subordinate" officer, and therefore the statute did not apply to the present case. He drew the magistrates' attention to other portions of the Act in support of his argument.

Stearns contended that the statute applied to the present case. A leading stoker was not a "subordinate" officer, but a "seaman" only. The Act was intended to apply to seamen generally. The terms "petty" officer and "subordinate" officer were not synonymous, although he was unable to say what the Legislature meant by the latter term. If Mr. Cousins' objection was held good, the operation of this beneficial statute would be much curtailed.

Cousins, in reply, said that the magistrates had nothing to do with that. They must be guided by the ordinary rules by which statutes are construed. If the Legislature had made an omission, they could pass an Act of Parliament next year to remedy it.

The Court held that the matter was clear. A leading stoker was a "subordinate" officer in the navy, and the defendant's objection was fatal. They therefore dismissed the information.

Information dismissed.

WIGAN COUNTY COURT.

Thursday Oct. 7th, 1869.

(Before J. S. T. GREENE, Esq., Judge.)

ANDERTON v. WEBB.

Action for Cemetery Fees.

The plaintiff, clerk of St. Thomas's church, Wigan, claimed, as such clerk, certain fees, which he alleged to be due to him on burials in the Wigan cemetery of persons resident in the parish of St. Thomas, from the Rev. A. H. Webb, who has received such fees hitherto by virtue of his office as clerk in orders of the old parish of Wigan. The amount claimed, 9l. 3s. 7d., was not disputed.

Mayhew, for the plaintiff, Ellis for the defendant, argued the case on July 29.

His HONOUR now delivered judgment as follows:—The plaintiff, as clerk of St. Thomas's, Wigan, claims 9l. 3s. 7d., from the defendant, the amount of fees received by him as clerk of the ancient parish and parish church of Wigan for burials of persons dying in St. Thomas's district belonging to the Established Church and interred in the consecrated ground of the Wigan parish cemetery. The plaintiff was appointed by the incumbent of "the District Chapelry of St. Thomas's Wigan;" such is the designation of the church in the order of Council, and it has a particular district assigned to it under the 16th section of the 59 Geo. 3. c. 134. It had no burial ground to which persons could be brought to be buried, and where they had a right to be buried. It was brought into existence in 1852, under a definite authority, before the passing of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 106, and no proof has been adduced that its status has been altered by that Act or the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, and the 7 & 8 Vict., cited in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104. These, however, are the Acts creating separate parishes, and do not apply to St. Thomas's. A district chapelry in an ancient parish, created as St. Thomas's was, if of a very different constitution to a parish instituted in, and separated from, or rather carved out of the area of an ancient parish, and a clerk appointed by the incumbent of such a district has no right to what may be denominated the ecclesiastical parochial burial fees. I have not overlooked, and it may not be out of place here to allude to the clause where the commissioners represent to the council that it appears expedient that banns of matrimony should be published and that marriages, baptisms, churchings, and burials should be solemnised or performed in the said church of St. Thomas's, Wigan, and that all the fees to arise therefrom should be paid and belong to the incumbent of such church for the time being, and, semble, to his accessory, the clerk. This was a common form, including trite expressions so often retained in the language of official documents when changes by law or by circumstances have rendered them partially or wholly effete, and indeed inaccurate. Such is the case here. There was no burial-ground as a fact, and in law we know that Orders in Council are not creators of, but must follow and subserve the law.

The verdict will be for the defendant, or a nonsuit if the plaintiff so elects.

Case refused. Costs granted to defendant.

CORONERS' INQUESTS.—The number of inquests held in England and Wales has shown little variation from year to year of late. For the last five years it has ranged between 24,600 and about 25,000; in 1868 it was 24,774. The inquests of 1868 were held upon 17,476 male persons, and 7298 females: 6796 of these persons were not more than seven years old; 1791 were children above seven but not sixteen years old; 11,802 were persons between sixteen and sixty; 4052 aged persons above sixty; and there were 333 whose ages are not specified. Nearly a fourth of the children under seven years of age were illegitimate; but, according to the Registrar-General's returns, only one in sixteen or seventeen of the children born in England and Wales is illegitimate. The contrast between the two numbers tells its own story, or, if that be not enough, we may take a lower age; inquests were held in 1868 upon 3902 infants not more than a year old, and 1153 of them were illegitimate—nearer one in three than one in four. The verdicts of coroners' juries at the inquests of 1868 were as follows:—In 261 cases murder; in 235 manslaughter; in 3 justifiable homicide; in 1536, suicide; in 11,033, accidental death; in 157, injuries from causes unknown; in 2824, found dead; in 320, excessive drinking; in 110, disease aggravated by neglect; in 191, want, cold, exposure, &c.; in 8094, death from other natural causes. The number of verdicts of murder exceeds the number of murders reported by the police, because in many instances the jury on the trial reduced the crime to manslaughter or concealment of birth, and the police return conforms to the decision of that jury. The number of coroners' inquests' verdicts of murder in England and Wales was 221 in 1862, 270 in 1863, 246 in 1864, 227 in 1865, 272 in 1866, 255 in 1867, 261 in 1868; and it is a startling fact that about two-thirds, sometimes more, are cases of infanticide. In 1863 166 of the verdicts of murder were on inquests upon infants not more than a year old; in 1864, 203; in 1865, 175; in 1866, 166; in 1867, 149; in 1868, 166. It is not uncommon that half of these verdicts, but in 1868 only 43 per cent., are given in the county of Middlesex; it is difficult, however, to discern how far our criminal returns represent the state of crime, and how far they are affected by more or less strictness in the administration of the law. Practically, the punishment for child murder, as our law stands, is two years' imprisonment for concealment of birth. The number of verdicts of suicide in England and Wales averaged 1306 a year 1856 to 1862; was 1335 in 1863, 1337 in 1864, 1397 in 1865, 1360 in 1866, 1356 in 1867, but rose suddenly to 1546 in 1868. In Yorkshire the number increased from 150 in 1867 to 165 in 1868; in Lancashire from 134 to 197; in Middlesex, from 227 to 274. In the city of London and borough of Southwark the number is stated at 23 men and nine women in both years. Suicide is nearly three times as frequent among men as it is among women; in 1868 the number of suicides was 1138 males and 408 females. There are in England and Wales more than 300 places for which coroners are appointed; in 1868 there were 75 in none of which were so many as ten inquests held.

PRISON WASTE.—The report of the Inspectors-General of Prisons in Ireland for last year shows that, however admirable the Irish convict system may be, the county and borough prisons of that country at any rate are neither more economical nor more reformatory than our own. "The annual cost of each prisoner lodged in the county gaol at Trim averaged 83l. 17s. 4d. In seven gaols the average cost was 60l. and upwards, and in twenty-seven it averaged more than 40l. for each inmate during the year." And we learn that the average net cost of each prisoner throughout the island for the year amounted to 36l. 11s. 1d., a sum which, we believe, is about equal to the pay of the constabulary! Is it not monstrous that in a country so heavily taxed, and where the necessities of life are so cheap, its criminals should cost individually as much as the members of a force perhaps unequalled in physique, intelligence, trustworthiness, and firmness under the most trying circumstances? Again, to illustrate this point still further, "In Meath the proportion of staff charges for each prisoner in 1868 was 51l. 15s. 8d.; in Tipperary, North, 44l. 1s. 5d.; in Leitrim, 40l. 11s. 2d.; and in Carlow, 39l. 0s. 7d." These exorbitant charges are caused by the keeping up of a separate prison for each county and division of a county, and even for most of the boroughs. Thus in Meath, where we have just seen the staff charges to be so high, the average daily number of prisoners confined was only 22; in North Tipperary, only 29; in Leitrim, only 20; and in Carlow, only 20; while in Antrim, where the average daily number of prisoners amounted to 247, "the staff charges were 7l. 9s. 11d." Surely it is time to shut up these local gaols, and substitute for them, according to the recommendation of the inspectors-general, one for each sex, under direct Government management. So much for the costliness of these prisons. Let the following quotation from the report speak for the reformatory inefficiency of the wasteful punitive labour carried on in them: "Of the 6421 females committed in 1868, 1746 were recommitted during the year; of these 756 four times and upwards. 565 of these women have been in gaol twenty-one times and upwards; 452 from twelve to twenty times; 748 from six to eleven times; and 1815 have two, three, four, and five committals recorded against them. Thus a small number of females, recommitted month after month, and year after year, occupy the gaols of the country, some spending eight, nine, and ten months of the year in prison, and occasionally recommitted within a few days, or perhaps hours, after being discharged from a previous imprisonment. . . . Twenty-five per cent. of the females committed in 1868 had been more than seven times previously in prison, and deducting the number of those committed for the first time in that year the commitments of the remaining females averaged twelve for each of their number, while the commitments of males so circumstanced show an average of five only for each individual." To this remarkable statement is appended a table, from which it appears that one of those female prisoners had been committed 199 times, one 224 times, and one 267 times! We are full of good resolutions respecting Ireland just now; here is a fine field, where no class prejudices will interfere, ready to the hand of any ardent reformer in want of work. Is there none such to be found who will help the overworked taxpayer to cut down the wasteful expenditure we have shown to be going on?—Pall-Mall Gazette.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

STAMP ACT—SHARES—TRANSFER—RESIDUE.—A testator by will bequeathed the residue of his "moneys, securities for moneys, goods, chattels, personal estate, and effects (subject to the payment of debts, &c., and legacies), unto A. and B., their executors, administrators, and assigns, and the survivors of them, upon trust, to call in, sell, and convert into money such part thereof as should not consist of money or securities for money, and stand possessed of the moneys arising by such sale and conversion, and all other his residuary personal estate in trust, to pay 3000l. to C., and the residue unto his (the testator's) nephew, R. H.; and he appointed A. and B. executors. All the debts and all the legacies which had become payable (including the said 3000l. to C.) were duly paid and discharged by the executors out of the personal estate and rents of the real estate, and several outstanding mortgage securities, made and granted to the testator in his lifetime, of sufficient amount for the purpose, were appropriated and set apart by them to meet certain other legacies bequeathed by the will, in which life interests were thereby directed to be paid to certain persons named. The residuary personal estate consisted (inter alia) of certain shares in the L. Gaslight Company, and several principal sums of money secured on several mortgages, transfers of mortgages, further charges, bonds, notes, and other securities, and it had not been necessary for any of the purposes of the will to call in, sell, or convert into money any portion of such residuary estate. At the request of R. H., the residuary legatee, A. and B. agreed, as such trustees and executors as aforesaid to transfer to him the above-mentioned shares and principal sums of money, and a deed dated 1st June 1866, and made between the said A. and B. of the one part, and R. H. of the other part, was accordingly prepared and executed, which recited all the facts and matters above stated. By the first testamentary clause of the deed all the said gas shares and also all the several principal sums of money secured by the said several mortgages, &c. specified in three several schedules therein underwritten, and all interest, &c., together with the said several mortgage deeds, were assigned and transferred by the said A. and B. unto the said R. H., his executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. By a second testatam clause, "to the intent that the several hereditaments comprised in the said several mortgages, &c. might be duly vested in the said R. H., his heirs and assigns," all the messuages, &c., comprised in the said several mortgages, &c., were granted and conveyed by the said A. and B. unto and to the use of the said R. H., his heirs and assigns for ever, subject to the equity of redemption then subsisting therein respectively: The aggregate amount of the several principal sums secured by the several mortgage deeds was 32,499l.: Held, by the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C. B. and Bramwell, Channell, and Cleasby, BB.), that the deed on the face of it was a technical, substantial, and real transfer both of the gas shares and the mortgages specifically to R. H., and as such came within the description of the Act of Parliament, and was therefore liable to the stamp duty of 10l. 12s. 6d., assessed as follows:—As a transfer of shares in the stock of the L. Gas Company, "not otherwise charged under the heads of mortgage or of conveyance" (53 Geo. 3. c. 184, schedule, tit. "Transfer"), to a duty of 1l. 10s.; as a transfer of mortgages for 32,499l., to an ad valorem duty (under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 96, s. 17) of 6d. per 100l., 8l. 2s. 6d., and to a progressive duty of 1l. Semble, had the bequest of the residue been directly to R. H., instead of to the executors in trust for him, no deed of transfer from the executors would have been necessary in order to vest the shares and mortgages in him: (Hall v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 151. Ex.)

WILL.—CONSTRUCTION.—THE WORD "SURVIVING" TO BE READ AS "OTHER."—In the construction of a will every word is to have its natural, that is, its ordinary meaning unless there be sufficient reason to the contrary. Where, therefore, a testatrix devised all her real and personal estate upon trust to sell and convert same, &c., and directed her trustees to stand possessed, the residuary personalty upon trust to invest, &c., and as to one-fourth to pay the income to her daughter F. C. for life, and after her death to "assign, transfer, and make over" same to and amongst her children, to be "assigned, transferred, and paid" at twenty-three, any child attaining twenty-three in the lifetime of F. C. was to acquire a "vested interest." In case of the death of F. C. without leaving "any such child or children," testatrix directed her trustees "to pay, and apply, and dispose of" the income of the fourth to and amongst her (the said testatrix's) surviving daughters." As to the remaining three-fourths she made similar dispositions for the benefit of her other three daughters, with particular directions in the event of the deaths of all the four daughters without leaving children, for the testatrix's next of kin. One of the daughters died without having been married. Another daughter died leaving children, of whom four attained the ages of twenty-three: Held, that the children of a deceased daughter were entitled to participate in the share of the daughter so dying, and that the word "surviving" in the will must be read as "other." (Badger v. Gregory, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 137. V.C.J.)

CONVERSION.—REAL ESTATE.—ASSIGNMENT OF PERSONAL ESTATE.—A testator devised his real estate to trustees upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof to his wife during her life, if she should so long continue his widow, and after her death or marrying again to hold the same in trust for all his children who should then be living as tenants in common, subject to a proviso that it should be lawful for the trustees for the time being, if they should in their discretion think it expedient so to do, upon the death or second marriage of his said wife, to sell his real estate; and he directed the trustees to divide the moneys to arise by any such sale amongst all his children, who should be then living, in equal shares. During the lifetime of the tenant for life, H., one of the children, assigned all his personal estate in possession, remainder, or expectancy to trustees for the benefit of his creditors; and afterwards he took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors' Act. Upon the death of the tenant for life, the trustees sold the real estate under the power contained in the will: Held, that there was no conversion, and that the assignee in insolvency, and not the trustees of the composition-deed, was entitled to H.'s share of the proceeds of the sale of real estate: (Re Ibbitson's Trust, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 163. M.R.)

SETTING ASIDE A DEED.—A release executed by a person ignorant of his rights, and where it was shown that he had no intention to release them was set aside: (Phelps v. Amcott, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 167. V.C.J.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

PRIVATE BILL.—EXTENSION OF BRANCH RAILWAY.—Two railway companies competed for traffic between the towns of M. and B., the distance by the L. and N. W. route being seventeen, and by the L. and Y. route under eleven miles. In 1865 the L. and N. W. Co. promoted a Bill for a branch which stopped about midway between the two towns, and they now proposed by an omnibus Bill to extend the branch to B., thus completing a new route, and reducing the distance from seventeen to twelve miles. The L. and Y. were allowed a locus standi against the Bill of 1865, and it was now contended that their appearance at that time shut them out from opposition to a mere prolongation of the branch line then authorised: Held, however, that they were entitled to a locus standi against the present Bill: (London and North-Western Railway Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 157. Court of Referees.)

HARBOUR.—RAILWAY.—LANDOWNER.—LOCUS STANDI.—A temporary occupation of land by the promoters of a Bill for the purposes of their undertaking, gives to petitioners against the Bill no right to a locus standi. Thus, where the Harbour Board of D. proposed a temporary occupation of land within certain specified limits, which included the petitioners' line of railway: Held, that the petitioners, who alleged that ground of opposition, could not be heard against the Bill: (Dundee Harbour Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 158. Court of Referees.)

CONTRIBUTORY.—INFANT.—ACQUIESCENCE.—Shares were transferred to B., an infant. After he had attained twenty-one, a solicitor attended chambers on his behalf, and for a number of other persons to oppose the making of a call. This was held not to be such a distinct act of acquiescence on the part of B. as to preclude him from afterwards applying to have his name struck off the list of contributories on the ground of infancy: (Wilson's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 164. M.R.)

FORFEITURE.—PAST MEMBER.—COMPANIES ACT 1862, s. 38.—B.'s shares were forfeited for nonpayment of a call, within one year prior to the commencement of the winding-up. The articles of association provided that such forfeiture should involve the extinction of all interest in, and claims and demands against the company in respect of the shares forfeited, and all other rights incident to them; but that any member whose shares had been forfeited should, notwithstanding, be liable to pay to the company all calls owing on such shares at the time of forfeiture. B. was held liable to be placed on the list of contributories as a past member of the company: (Creyke's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 165. V.C.M.)

AMALGAMATION.—ULTRA VIRES.—ACCEPTANCE OF SHARES.—LIABILITY OF SHAREHOLDER ACTING AS DIRECTOR.—The articles of association of the L. and N. Co. provided (in effect) that the power of appointing directors should vest in the shareholders, and that upon any amalgamation or sale of its business an extraordinary general meeting should approve and sanction it. That company entered into an agreement with the I. Co. for an amalgamation, and it was provided that the property of every kind of the latter should be transferred to the former; that the board of directors of the amalgamated company should consist of a stated number of members of each of the boards of the two companies, who were to be selected by themselves, and that the proposal should be sanctioned by the shareholders of both. S. and W. had been directors of the I. Co., and became entitled to shares under the agreement; they were entered on the register in respect of them, certificates were made out and forwarded, both of them were chosen to be directors of the amalgamated company, and both acted. The agreement was never ratified by the L. and N. Co., or by the amalgamated company: Held, under these circumstances, that S. and W. were not contributories of the amalgamated company, inasmuch as the agreement for amalgamation was ultra vires, and therefore void from the beginning; and as the allotment of shares to S. and W. was purely part of the amalgamation, and not a separate and independent contract on their part to accept shares: (Stace and Worth's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 182. L.J.J.)

LAW STUDENTS' JOURNAL.

EXAMINATION OF ARTICLED CLERKS.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.

Sir,—I am directed by the Examiners appointed for the Intermediate Examination of persons under articles of clerkship to attorneys, to inform you that Thursday, the 11th November, is the day appointed for the examination, and that candidates for examination are to attend on that day at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, London. The examination will commence at ten o'clock precisely, and close at four o'clock.

I have to remind you that your articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left with me on or before Monday the 25th October; and in case your articles and testimonials of service have been deposited here, they should be re-entered, the fee paid, and the answers completed on or before the 25th October. No candidate will be examined who shall not have complied with these conditions, or whose testimonials as to service or conduct shall not be satisfactory to the Examiners.

On the day of examination papers will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in writing, selected from the works specified by the Examiners; and a paper of questions on bookkeeping.

If you apply to be examined under the 4th section of the Attorneys Act 1860, you may, on application, obtain copies of the further questions relating to the ten years' service antecedent to the articles of clerkship; and such questions, duly answered, must be left with your articles, &c., on or before the 25th October. (a)

Fee, each term, on articles and testimonials of service, 5s.—not to be sent in postage stamps.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,
11th October 1869. E. W. WILLIAMSON,
Secretary.

FINAL EXAMINATION.

Sir,—I am directed by the Examiners appointed for the examination of persons applying to be admitted attorneys, to inform you that Tuesday the 9th and Wednesday the 10th November are the days appointed for the examination, and that candidates for examination are to attend on those days at half-past nine in the forenoon of each day, at the hall of the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane, London. The examination will commence at ten o'clock precisely, and close at four o'clock.

I have to remind you that your articles of clerkship and assignment, if any, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left with me on or before Monday the 1st November. If your articles were executed after the 1st Jan. 1861, the certificate of your having passed the Intermediate Examination should be left at the same time; and in case your articles and testimonials of service have been deposited here, they should be re-entered, the fee paid, and the answers completed on or before the 1st November.

If you apply to be examined under the 4th section of the Attorneys Act 1860, you may, on application, obtain copies of the further questions relating to the ten years' service antecedent to the articles of clerkship; and such questions, duly answered, must be left with your articles, &c., on or before the 1st November. (a)

Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the term, or in the vacation following such term, the candidate may be examined conditionally; but the articles must be left on or before the 1st November and answers up to that time. If part of the term has been served with a barrister, special pleader, or London agent, answers to the questions must be obtained from them as to the time served with each respectively. No candidate will be examined who shall not have complied with these conditions, or whose testimonials as to service or conduct shall not be satisfactory to the Examiners.

On the first day of examination papers will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions

(a) Candidates who have already proved to the satisfaction of the Examiners the ten years' antecedent service are not required to leave replies to the further questions again.

to be answered in writing, classed under the several heads of—1. Preliminary; 2. Common and Statute Law, and Practice of the Courts; 3. Conveyancing.

On the second day further papers will be delivered to each candidate, containing questions to be answered in—4. Preliminary; 5. Equity, and Practice of the Courts; 6. Bankruptcy, and Practice of the Courts; 7. Criminal Law, and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.

Each candidate is required to answer all the preliminary questions (Nos. 1 and 4); and also to answer in three of the other heads of inquiry, viz.:—Common Law, Conveyancing, and Equity. The Examiners will continue the practice of proposing questions in Bankruptcy and in Criminal Law and Proceedings before Justices of the Peace, in order that candidates who have given their attention to these subjects may have the advantage of answering such questions, and having the correctness of their answers in those departments taken into consideration in summing up the merit of their general examination.

Fee, each term, on articles and testimonials of service, 15s.—not to be sent in postage stamps.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,
11th October 1869. E. W. WILLIAMSON,
Secretary.

MARITIME LAW

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

BOTTOMRY — HYPOTHECATION OF CARGO — ADVANCES OF FREIGHT — COMMISSION.—A ship, on a voyage from Galveston, United States, to Liverpool, put into Bermuda disabled. The master wrote to the owners of the ship and cargo, and meanwhile, to avoid delay and loss, commenced repairing the ship. The repairs were completed, and the master then, fearing detention of the ship, and having received no replies from the owners of the ship and cargo, raised money to pay for the repairs on bottomry of the ship, freight and cargo. The lenders were not the repairers of the ship. In a suit by the bondholders against the owners of the cargo. Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the bond was valid and bound the cargo. The necessity which will validate the hypothecation of a cargo by bottomry, is a high degree of need, arising when choice is to be made of one of several alternatives, under the peril of severe loss, if a wrong choice should be made. And any combination of events which should prevent the completion of the voyage with profit, unless money should be obtained by bottomry, would raise the question whether there was need for bottomry in such high degree as to create a necessity. If, though the repairs are complete, yet the ship cannot leave the port until they are paid for, the completion of repairs is an immaterial fact in estimating the degree of need for bottomry. The possibility of communication with the owners of the ship or cargo must be construed by estimating the cost and risk incidental to the delay from the attempt to make such communication, and the probability of failure, after every exertion made. Advances, not stipulated for in the charter-party, were obtained by the captain from the charterer. The receipt, given by the former, promised to pay the said advances "out of the proceeds of 10% per cent. per annum and charges for insurance." Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the sums obtained were advances of freight to be repaid by deductions from freight, if earned; and if not earned, then to be lost by the charterer, unless he should have used the stipulated premium in insuring. A usage to establish a right to deduct commission for obtaining the charter from the freight as against the holder of a bottomry bond, must be distinctly proved: (The Karnak 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 159. Priv. Co.)

COUNTY COURTS.

ATTLEBOROUGH COUNTY COURT.

Friday, Sept. 17.

(Before CARLOS COOPER, Esq., Deputy-Judge.)

CLOWES v. COLMAN.

Fees of steward of the manor—Payment by cheque.

The amount for which the summons in this case was taken out was 5*l.* odd, for fees payable to the plaintiff in his capacity of steward for the manor of West Harling, for the admission of the defendant to some copyhold purchased by him.

Brooke appeared for the plaintiff.

Mr. Colman conducted his own case.

It seemed that on the previous Saturday the defendant had sent a cheque for the amount less 6*s.* 8*d.*, which was really all the difference in dispute; but as the cheque did not reach Attleborough till after office hours, it was held not to be a payment (strictly speaking, County Court registrars are not bound to recognise cheques as payments at all) within five clear days, so as to entitle the defendant to judgment—that is, supposing when the trial be established, that he had paid in sufficient to cover his liability.

Mr. Colman resisted his responsibility for any more than he had paid in chiefly on the ground that a sovereign had been charged for two proclamations instead of 13*s.* 4*d.*, the latter Mr. Colman alleged being the customary fee, whereas he only knew of one; but he would not undertake to swear that two had not been made.

The plaintiff and his clerk distinctly deposed to two proclamations having been made, and that all the charges were fair and reasonable; and upon this evidence his Honour gave judgment for the full amount, with costs.

CAMBRIDGE COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, Aug. 19.

(Before JOHN COLLYER, Esq., Judge.)

CUSTANCE v. BIDWELL.

Action remitted from Superior Court—Procedure.

In an action of tort remitted from the Court of Queen's Bench to a County Court:

Held, that the course of procedure as to summing up defendant's case was the same as if the action had been tried at Nisi Prius.

Where C. gave B. a bill of sale, which was satisfied, and afterwards returned to C. as a security for other advances:

Held, that under the plea of leave and licence, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, but that an equitable plea would have succeeded, and under the circumstances only nominal damages were given.

This was an action sent down to the Cambridge County Court for trial, by an order of Baron Bramwell, and the following is the case as disclosed by the pleadings.

Declaration. George Custance sues Thomas Bidwell, for that the defendant on divers days and times broke and entered a certain messuage or dwelling-house, shop, and premises of the plaintiff, situate in Histon-road, in the parish of Chesterton, in the county of Cambridge, and made a noise and disturbance therein for long times, and broke open and to pieces the door of the said messuage and dwelling-house, and during the times aforesaid seized and took the household furniture and effects, and also a pony and cart and harness, then being in and on and about the said messuage or dwelling-house, shop and premises. By means of which said premises the plaintiff and his family were much annoyed and disturbed in the possession and enjoyment of the plaintiff's said messuage or dwelling-house, shop, and premises. And the plaintiff was and is greatly injured in his trade and business of a butcher carried on by him in the said messuage, dwelling-house, shop, and premises.

And the plaintiff also sues the defendant for that before the committing by the defendants of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, the plaintiff was and is a butcher and carried on and carries on the trade and business of a butcher in and upon a messuage, shop, and premises situate in Histon-road, in the parish of Chesterton, in the county of Cambridge, and the plaintiff, being indebted to the defendant in a certain sum of money, to wit, 25*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* on the 16th Sept. 1868, gave and executed to the defendant in consideration of the said debt owing to him, a bill of sale of plaintiff's household furniture and effects, and also of plaintiff's pony and cart, and harness respectively being in and upon his said house and premises, and whereby the plaintiff assigned the same to the defendant, subject to a condition therein, whereby it was agreed that if the plaintiff should pay to the defendant the said sum of 25*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* on the 16th Dec. 1868, the said bill of sale should be void; but that if default should be made by the plaintiff in the payment of the said sum of money on the day aforesaid, it should be lawful for the defendant immediately on or at any time thereafter to enter upon plaintiff's said premises, and to sell and dispose of the plaintiff's said household furniture, and effects, pony cart and harness by auction or by private contract, and to deduct the said debt out of the proceeds of such sale, and afterwards and before the committing by the defendant of the said grievances, and before the said 16th Dec. 1868, and on the 1st Dec. 1868 the plaintiff duly paid to the defendant the said debt or sum of 25*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, which payment the defendant accepted and received of the plaintiff, and the said debt was thereupon then satisfied and discharged, and the said bill of sale according to the terms thereof became and was and is void and was given up by the defendant to the plaintiff satisfied, yet the defendant well knowing the said several premises afterwards, and after the said 16th Dec. 1868, intending to injure the plaintiff wrongfully and maliciously publicly advertised, and caused to be publicly advertised, and wrongfully and maliciously issued and published, and caused to be issued and published and posted up, and against public walls and places, divers, and very many public placards, stating that the plaintiff's said household furniture and effects, and also his said pony cart and harness were to be sold by public auction by one Octavius Parker on a future day and time mentioned in the said placards upon the plaintiff's said messuage and premises under the said bill of sale, and the defendant wrongfully and maliciously kept and continued the said public placards of the alleged proposed sale posted up, and against public walls and places, exposed to public view for a long time. By means of which said premises the plaintiff was and is greatly injured in his said trade and business of a butcher, so by him carried on in his said premises, and his credit in his said business has been and is greatly injured. And he has been and is otherwise greatly damaged and aggrieved.

And the plaintiff also sues the defendant for money payable by the defendant to the plaintiff for money had and received by the defendant for the use of the plaintiff, and for money found to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff on accounts stated between the plaintiff and defendant. And the plaintiff claims 200*l.*

Pleas: 1. As to the first and second counts, not guilty. 2. As to the first and second counts, says that he did what is complained of by the leave of the plaintiff. 3. And for a third plea the defendant, as to the first count, says that the said messuage or dwelling-house, shop, premises, furniture, effects, pony cart and harness, in the first count mentioned, were not, nor were any of them, the plaintiff's as alleged. 4. And for a fourth plea, the defendant, as to the second count, says that after the payment of the said sum of 25*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*, and after the said bill of sale had become void, and after the same had been given up so satisfied as aforesaid, and before the committing of the said grievances, the plaintiff duly assigned to the defendant the said household furniture and effects, and the said pony cart and harness, in order to secure a certain other debt and certain other moneys then due and payable from the plaintiff to the defendant on the terms that in the event of the plaintiff neglecting to pay the said last-mentioned debt and moneys to the defendant on demand, it should be lawful for the defendant to sell the said furniture, effects, pony, cart, and harness by public auction or private contract, and out of the proceeds to satisfy the said last-mentioned debt and moneys, and for the purpose of the said sale to issue and publish and post up against public walls and places in the neighbourhood placards announcing the said sale; and the defendant says that afterwards, and before, and at the time of committing of the alleged grievances, the said last-mentioned debt and moneys being in hand after demand thereof duly made by the defendant on the plaintiff, and all things necessary on that behalf having been done and happened, and all times having elapsed necessary to entitle the defendant to exercise the said power of sale, and to sell the said assigned property by public auction for the purpose of realising the said security without any malice duly issued and published and posted up against public walls and places in the neighbourhood of the said intended sale placards announcing the said intended sale, which are the grievances complained of. 5. Never indebted as to last count of declaration.

Naylor for the plaintiff.

Cockerell for the defendant.

The plaintiff was a butcher residing at Chesterton, and having become indebted to the defendant, he gave him a bill of sale of his household furniture and effects, which was satisfied on the 1st Dec. 1868. Subsequently the plaintiff again became indebted to the defendant, and on the 14th Dec. the plaintiff redelivered the bill of sale to the defendant, stating that he was in difficulties, and requesting the defendant to hold it for his own and the plaintiff's protection. The plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in the sum of 53*l.*, when on the 6th Jan. plaintiff's wife communicated with defendant, and in consequence he saw her, when she stated her husband was in difficulties, and she wished him to enter under the bill of sale. Accordingly a seizure was made under the old bill of sale, and hence the action.

Cockerell, at the close of defendant's case, summed it up; his Honour stating he should adhere to the same course of procedure as existed in the Superior Courts in cases remitted to him for trial.

His Honour, in giving judgment, said the defence could not be sustained in point of law, as possession could not be taken on a bill of sale which had previously been satisfied; but he thought that an equitable plea would have been successful. He considered the plaintiff had sustained no substantial injury, and the judgment would be for one farthing damages.

Judgment accordingly.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Monday, Sept. 13.

(Before Mr. Deputy-Commissioner YATE LEE.)

Re HURST.

Bankruptcy Act 1861, ss. 1 and 101—Bankruptcy Act 1849, s. 112—Application for release—A second arrest in respect of same judgment.

Held, that a creditor's common law rights against his debtor are not affected by a pending bankruptcy, unless the bankrupt holds a protection:

Held, that the protection granted by a registrar to a debtor in prison, by virtue of sect. 101 Bankruptcy Act 1861, when unlimited, and not revoked or withdrawn during the prosecution of his bankruptcy, is sufficient to satisfy the terms of the latter portion of sect. 112 Bankruptcy Act 1849, and prevent the original execution creditor arresting his debtor a second time.

Quære, ought not the protection granted under sect. 101 to be withdrawn on the bankrupt's surrender at the bankruptcy court, and in lieu thereof the protection specified in sect. 112 to be granted?

This was an application for release from prison under somewhat exceptional circumstances. The bankrupt, a biscuit manufacturer in Beau-street, was arrested and lodged in the borough gaol on the 9th Feb. last, under a warrant issued in respect of a judgment recovered in the Liverpool Court of Passage for a debt of 25*l.* due to Mr. J. M. Winchester, of Lord-street. Here remained in prison until the 19th March following, when the registrar of the Bankruptcy Court, on the occasion of his usual monthly visit, examined the debtor, adjudicated him bankrupt, and in the form prescribed by the rules and orders framed for carrying out the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, directed his release, and granted him protection from all claims, debts, or demands then owing by him. The bankrupt in due course surrendered at the Bankruptcy Court, where the proceedings had been ordered to be prosecuted, and, as is the practice in such cases, the usual order of protection was granted to him by the court until the first meeting of creditors, and then renewed until the sitting appointed for last examination. At that and several adjourned sittings the bankrupt appeared, but being opposed and his accounts requiring amendment, the case finally stood over till the 2nd July last. On that day the last examination, through the bankrupt not being prepared to comply with the order of the court by paying the costs of several previous sittings, was on his own election, adjourned sine die, and a month's protection only granted, but no order was made revoking the original general protection granted to the bankrupt when in prison. Notwithstanding such last-named protection, the bankrupt was on the 27th Aug. last a second time arrested and lodged in gaol under a warrant issued in respect of the same debt as he was previously arrested for and discharged from by the registrar in March.

Dr. Commins, barrister, appeared for the bankrupt.

Barrell, solicitor, for the execution-creditor.

Commings, in support of the application, submitted that the creditor had no legal right to arrest his debtor a second time upon the same judgment; but that on the adjudication of bankruptcy and the release of the bankrupt from the detainer of the execution-creditor the remedy of the latter was confined to his proof of debt under the bankruptcy.

Barrell, in opposition, argued upon the authority of the cases of Ex parte Kimberley, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 291, and Rotherham v. Lelliott, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 802, that where the last examination of a bankrupt was adjourned sine die, without protection, the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application for release. The only power invested in the court was that conferred by the 112th section, and that applied only to the case of a bankrupt who at the time of his arrest enjoyed protection. He further submitted that if the arrest was illegal the court out of which the process issued could alone set it aside.

Commings, in reply, said he did not move under the 112th sect., but under sect. 1 of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, which conferred upon the court all the powers of the Superior Courts, and under which section continual applications were granted for the release of debtors who had executed trusts. There was no specific provision in the latter case authorising a debtor who had registered a deed under sect. 192 to be released, yet in the early cases the common law courts when applied to had ruled the Court of Bankruptcy to be the proper tribunal, and that court had since always entertained such applications. He also contended that an order from the court which issued the original execution ought to have been obtained prior to any second warrant of arrest being issued; and, further, that by the terms of the latter portion of the 112th section the creditor was precluded from arresting the bankrupt unless he were without protection; and therefore here, where a general order of protection was granted at the time of the adjudication, and was still in existence, the arrest was clearly bad.

His HONOUR, in giving judgment, said he was of opinion that the adjudication and order of release by the registrar in March last did not restrict or affect the right of the execution-creditor to arrest and detain his debtor a second time, providing he was without protection; but, as under the exceptional provisions of the 101st section of the Bankruptcy Act 1861, a general protection had been granted to this bankrupt from all debts proveable under the bankruptcy, and, as that protection had never been specifically revoked or withdrawn, although it had been supplemented in accordance with a practice of the court, by a duplicate protection which had expired at the time of the arrest, he should hold the second arrest by the same creditor at a time when the bankrupt held a general protection to be in contravention of the latter portion of the 112th section of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act 1849, and therefore illegal. The cases cited in argument he considered distinguishable from that before the court, as there the bankrupts were without any protection; but here a general protection was given and had never been specifically withdrawn. Section 1 of the Act of 1861 conferred upon the court all the powers of the Superior Courts for the purpose of carrying out its provisions, and as one of those provisions had been contravened by the arrest of this bankrupt, he should make order that he be forthwith released.

*Notice of appeal was given, and a deposit of 10*l.* ordered.*

SIR WILLIAM DRAKE.—I have just seen your eulogium on the new knight whose electioneering services have been thus honoured. It is understood here that he was the agent by whom the engagement was made on the occasion of the petition against the return of Mr. Barclay and Lord William Hay in 1865 that it should be withdrawn on the express pledge that no second candidate should be brought forward by the Liberals at the next election, and that Sir William Drake again acted for Mr. Barclay on the occasion of the last petition, when Mr. Serjeant Cox was induced to withdraw his petition against Mr. Barclay, on condition that the petition should be withdrawn against himself, and which engagement was no sooner performed by the Serjeant, than the petitioner refused to perform his part of the contract. If we are rightly informed as to this, how is your eulogium justified? If the accredited report is not true, it ought, in justice to all parties, to be contradicted by a frank statement of the facts.—I am, &c., yours,
Taunton, Oct. 9, 1869. TAUNTONIENSIS.

CUSTOMARY HEREDITAMENTS—COVENANT TO SURRENDER.—Mr. Wilson appears to have confounded a covenant to surrender with an actual surrender, and likewise the tenure called customary freehold with copyhold. In the case of customary freehold, which is the tenure of land in the manor of Langdale, the actual surrender is made by the deed of conveyance itself, upon the production of which at the manor court the steward admits; whereas copyhold hereditaments are surrendered in court (generally by the delivery of a wand, glove, or other symbol) and admittance thereupon granted. The steward of the manor of Langdale could not, therefore, admit E. F. upon the mere covenant from A. B. to surrender, as there was no actual surrender; and he was right in requiring the production of the deed of surrender according to the custom of the manor. I think, probably, the covenant which A. B. has entered into will be sufficient to enable E. F. to compel him to execute a proper deed of surrender upon the production of which the steward would at once admit. HARKSTEAD.

THE BRISTOL SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS—CORRECTION OF A STATEMENT BY DR. WADDILOVE.—Amongst the papers read at the Bristol Social Science Congress was one by myself, entitled "the Dignity and Efficacy of English Law as diminished by the Capital Penalty." An interesting discussion ensued in which Sir John Bowring, Mr. T. W. Saunders (the Recorder of Bath), Mr. Hurst, and other gentlemen, advocated the abolition of the death penalty, whilst Mr. Serjeant Cox and Dr. Waddilove argued for its retention. The Bristol Daily Post, in reporting the discussion, stated that Dr. Waddilove asserted that my paper was "evidently written before the abolition of public executions, and that he recognised it as precisely the same paper read under a different title five years ago at York." Two other local journals report similarly. As this remark conveys a most erroneous impression, and would also imply some disrespect, on my part, towards the Social Science Congress, a brief refutation is needful. Dr. Waddilove is a lively and humorous speaker, to whom I have repeatedly listened with interest; but in this case he has allowed his ready speech to outstrip fact. It is true that a paper on capital punishment (by Mr. Beggs) was read at the York Congress in Sept. 1864; but not only was its train of argument very different from my paper, but it did not contain a single fact or illustration used in the latter, which, in manuscript, contains thirteen pages, more than eleven of which consist of illustrative facts and confirmatory opinions, nearly all dating since 1864. For example, I have quoted in it the admissions of legal inefficiency made in Parliament by Mr. Home Secretary Bruce in 1869; the speech of Mr. Henley in support of Mr. Gilpin's Bill, also in 1869; the letter of Mr. Bright to Hon. M. H. Bovee on the sacredness of human life, written in 1868; the passage by Earl Russell advocating abolition, first published in the 1865 edition of his English Constitution; the striking statistics on criminal lunacy, prepared by Dr. Guy for the Statistical Society in 1869; and extracts from the evidence in support of abolition, given before the Capital Punishment Commission by Lord Chief Baron Kelly, Hon. George Denman, Mr. Serjeant Parry, Sir Walter Crofton, Mr. Frederic Hill, Capt. Cartwright, of Gloucester Gaol, Mr. Jessop, of Horsemonger-lane Gaol, and others. (That commission did not commence examining witnesses till Nov. 29, 1864, two months after the York Congress.) My paper further contained a list of M.P.s who supported Mr. Gilpin in 1869, and other statements of necessity are more recent than 1864. It was commenced in Aug. 1869, being prepared at the suggestion of Miss Mary Carpenter. One or two of the reasons for abolition alluded to in the York paper may have been also alluded to by me, as is almost unavoidable in treating of such a subject. But the general argument and all the illustrations and confirmations were very different. Dr. Waddilove is a doctor of civil law, and, as such, should be accurate and fair. But it is really difficult to account for his strange statement at Bristol. Perhaps he was, as on other occasions, indulging in jest. But jests of this nature would seem to indicate that he felt himself hard pressed to conceal the weakness of his own arguments, and that he therefore availed himself of the principle said to guide a certain class of practitioners at the Old Bailey, "When you have no other line of defence, abuse or ridicule the plaintiff's attorney."

THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION.—To be articulated without passing this examination it is necessary to present a petition to the Lord Chief Justice of England, accompanied by testimonials as to character and abilities, praying his Lordship to grant an order to dispense with the examination. The petition is referred by his Lordship to the Council of the Incorporated Law Society, and after considering the circumstances of the case, as represented in the petition, they report thereon to the Lord Chief Justice; but there is now very little chance of obtaining an order, and I would advise any ten years' clerk intending to be articulated to prepare himself as well as he can for the examination and be examined in London; and if he does his best and makes known his case to the examiners, he may rely on those gentlemen dealing considerately with him.—AN UNSUCCESSFUL PETITIONER WHO HAS SINCE PASSED THE EXAMINATION, AND IS ARTICLED.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—I am preparing for my Intermediate Examination, and shall be glad if any of your readers will answer me the following questions. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, s. 1 enacts, that the heir or devisee of real estate shall not claim payment of mortgage out of personal assets; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, s. 2, enacts that, in the construction of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, the word "mortgage" shall be deemed to extend to any lien for unpaid purchase-money upon any lands or hereditaments purchased by a testator. At p. 164, 8th edit., Williams on Real Property, it is stated that if a purchaser were to die intestate the moment after the contract, the equitable estate in fee simple which he had just acquired would descend to his heir-at-law, who would have a right to have the estate paid for out of the money and other personal estate of his deceased ancestor.

Prior to the passing of the last-mentioned statute, this was the case, but is it so now? Would not the lands descend to the heir-at-law charged with the payment to the vendor of the unpaid purchase-money? INTERMEDIATE.

Queries.

105. PEW-RENTS—INCOMING VICAR.—A. B. is the vicar of a London district church, where it is the custom of the churchwardens to collect the pew-rents six months in advance, and pay the same over to the vicar; in the event of the vicar dying before the expiration of the six months, having been paid the whole amount of the pew-rents collected, would the churchwardens be liable to the incoming vicar for a proportionate part of the amount they had already received and paid to the deceased vicar before his death and before becoming due, such collections being, as before stated, received and paid in advance. H. F.

106. DEED OF ASSIGNMENT—REAL ESTATE.—In 1835 A. B. executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors. The personal effects were sold shortly after, and a small dividend paid. The real estate has not yet been realised. Will anyone inform me whether the creditors are barred through lapse of time from a further dividend? B. C.

107. ENROLMENT OF CHAPEL DEED.—Is it necessary to enrol an enfranchisement deed of a chapel. The trust-deed of the chapel was duly enrolled at the time the chapel was built. The property being copyhold, the trustees recently enfranchised it, and then the estate became freehold; the question is, whether it is necessary that the enfranchisement deed should be enrolled in Chancery. My own view of it is, that it is not; but, as there are contrary opinions, I shall be obliged to any of your correspondents who can throw light on the point. (Vide the case of Ashton v. Jones, 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. p. 47.) W. W. C.

108. CRIMINAL LAW.—A summons heard in petty sessions contains a charge of stealing two articles; the prisoner pleaded guilty to having stolen one of them, but not guilty as to the other. Can the plea be necessarily considered and taken as a plea of guilty to both charges? Give authorities determining the effect of such a plea, and state what is the usual practice. T.

(Q. 101.) LEASES AND SALES OF SETTLED ESTATES.—The question put by "P. O. T.," as I understand it, is whether the exception of "the principal mansion house, and the demesnes thereof, and other lands usually occupied therewith," contained in the 32nd section of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, applies in the case of a lease of a farm and farmhouse, the farmhouse being the only building on the estate. It is a question of construction, and the rule of law upon the construction of all statutes is to construe them according to the plain, literal, and grammatical meaning of the words in which they are expressed, unless the construction leads to a plain and clear contradiction of the apparent purpose of the Act, or to some palpable or evident absurdity: (Attorney-General v. Lockwood, 9 Mee. & W. 398.) Another sound and recognised principle of construction is, that statutes shall not be presumed to alter the common law further or otherwise than the enactments have expressly declared: (Arthur v. Bohenheim, 11 Mod. 148.) Words in a statute, the meaning of which is well understood at common law, shall be understood in the sense given to them by the common law, unless a different sense is given to such word: (Smith v. Harnan, 6 Mod. 161.) I am not aware of any case bearing upon the words of the exception in the 32nd section of the Settled Estates Act, therefore I will attempt to answer the question of P. O. T. with the aid of the foregoing canons of interpretation, particularly the last. The statute is clearly an enabling one, passed for the promotion of agriculture, and to extend the common law power of leasing entailed and other life estates. The words of the exception requiring consideration are—"mansion house," "demesne lands," and "occupied therewith," each of these has a legal significance reconcilable with a plain, literal, and grammatical common sense meaning, and in that sense they are no doubt used in this statute. There is no special dignity or significance attaching to the expression "mansion house;" it is used in Sir Edward Coke's definition of a burglar (3 Inst. 63), and is synonymous with dwelling-house, wherein a person resides; a house wherein no man resides is not a mansion; but a chamber in a college, or an inn of court, which each inhabitant hath a distinct property in, is the mansion house of the owner (1 Hal. P. C. 556). "Demesne lands" (as distinguished from tenemental lands distributed or let by lords to their tenants) were those lands which the owners of manors kept in their own hands as necessary for the use of their families, and were called terra domus, being occupied by the lord or dominus manorii, and his servants. "Occupied therewith" has reference to and includes lands usually with the mansion and demesne lands, in contradistinction to those "commonly letten," which latter referred to and meant lands which the enabling stat. 32 Hen. 8, c. 28, authorised tenants in tail, and others to lease for three lives or twenty-one years. I think we may, for these reasons, conclude that the exception "principal mansion house," &c., in sect. 32 of the Settled Estates Act, refers to and embraces the house personally occupied by the lessor (analogous to the ancient manor houses), and that "demesne and other lands occupied therewith," refer to and embrace those lands used, kept in hand, occupied, cultivated, and enjoyed by the lessor with the house or homestead, and not "commonly letten." "P. O. T." does not say whether the farm and farmhouse, leased by the tenant for life, is the only estate held for life under the same title, but I assume it is so, and therefore if the house and land have not hereto been used by the settlor or tenant for life and their ancestors as an ancestral residence and for occupation purposes, but have been "commonly letten," they do not come within the exception or reservation in the Settled Estates Act of "the principal mansion house," &c., and the lease will bind the tenant in tail, if otherwise effectual for that purpose. I don't know whether either of the Acts (21 & 22 Vict. c. 77 and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 45) for amending the Settled Estates Act 1856 in any way affects the question (not having those Acts by me), but reference should be made to them. (Q. 104.) CONVEYANCE—COVERTURE.—Many of the points appearing in your "Notes and Queries" column are interesting, and the thought and research necessary for their solution very useful and instructive. I would suggest, however, that the facts (upon which the points are based) should be stated with more precision and distinctness, and not left so much to surmise and conjecture. In this question, "W. W." does not state in what shape the conveyance of the land purchased by a married woman out of her own earnings, was taken; whether to a trustee for her separate use, or to a trustee subject to her appointment, or direct to the use of herself, her heirs and assigns. A feme covert may purchase an estate without the consent of her husband, and the conveyance is good during the coverture, till he avoids it by some act declaring his dissent: (Co. Litt. 3; Bell's Black. Com. 1813. vol. 2, p. 278.) But the conveyance or other contract of [i.e., by] a feme covert, except by some matter of record, is absolutely void, and not merely voidable, and therefore cannot be affirmed or made good by any subsequent agreement: (Ibid.; Perkins, 154; 1 Sid. 120). From this it must be understood that a married woman could not, before the Fines and Recoveries Abolition Act, convey her property except by recovery, i.e., matter of record; but since 1st Jan. 1834, a married woman may, with the concurrence of her husband, and by deed acknowledged, dispose of lands of any tenure, as fully and effectually as if she were a feme sole (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 74, s. 77); the husband's concurrence may, however, be dispensed with by an order of the Court of Common Pleas (obtained in a summary way upon the application of the wife), if the husband be living apart from his wife either by mutual consent or by sentence of divorce (sect. 91); or if the wife be deserted by her husband: (Re Yarnall, 17 C. B. 189). There having been no divorce, all the privileges and liabilities arising under the marriage contract remain intact; but if the conveyance was made to a trustee for the ex parte use of the wife (as it might have been of property purchased out of her savings: vide, form of such a conveyance in Davidson's Conc. Prec. 84, 6th edit.), she would be freed from the disability of coverture and invested with the rights and powers of a person sui juris, quoad the property so conveyed to her separate use (Taylor v. Meads, 13 W. R. 394); it being settled that an estate in fee may be limited to the separate use of a married woman, thus giving her an absolute ownership, and all the rights incident to that ownership: (Turner, L. J. in Atchison v. Le Maur, 1854; vide 7 Sol's. Jour. 640; 8 Sol's. Jour. 26.) The intervention of a trustee in a conveyance for the separate use of a married woman is not essential, though usual and proper: (Gilbert v. Lewis, 36 L. J., N. S. 351.) It seems, therefore, that if property is conveyed to the separate use of a married woman by the intervention of a trustee, the deed disposing of her estate will not require her acknowledgment, as the instrument without acknowledgment would operate as a direction to the trustee to deal with such estate according to the new trust created by such direction: (Moore v. Morris, 4 Drew. 37; Harris v. Mott, 14 Beav. 169; Taylor v. Meads, sup.; Hall v. Waterhouse, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 297; see also Lechmere v. Brothridge, 27 J. P. 500; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 751; 11 W. R. 841, overruled by Taylor v. Meads.) In the case stated by W. W., there does not seem much difficulty, inasmuch as the husband will concur with the wife in the conveyance; and, as the value of the property is so trifling, acknowledgment may be dispensed with, but the husband (and also the wife, so as to bind her separate estate) should covenant for title and further assurance. As pertinent to the question, it may be observed, that the savings by a married woman out of an allowance made to her by her husband for housekeeping, or out of money settled upon her before marriage, or out of alimony, belong to her for her separate use, and are at her absolute disposal (Moore v. Barber, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 664); and as to her savings she may make a will notwithstanding the husband dissent: (Herbert v. Herbert, Prec. Ch. 44; Peacock v. Mork, 2 Ves. 190.) Hence it is assumed that no trust would result in favour of the husband by reason of the purchase or consideration money having been paid out of moneys to which the husband might be considered entitled in his marital right. An order of protection under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, could not be obtained as there is no desertion; and if obtained, I do not think it would affect the question, because the estate does not seem to apply to the protection of real estate, but of personal property and money only. I am not aware that it has been held to apply to real estate in general, or to real estate purchased by a wife out of money saved by her during the coverture or desertion, or vesting in her subsequently to the granting of the order. LAW LIBRARY.

Paterson's Practical Statutes for 1869. Edited by WILLIAM PATERSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. LAW TIMES Office.

This is, we believe, the twenty-first year of the issue of an annual whose popularity affords the best proof of its utility, inasmuch that there are few offices in which it is not found, and it is a feature in the bag of the practitioner in the County Courts and other tribunals. The plan of it is unique. Omitting all the Irish, Scotch, and merely formal statutes, it gives only those required for practical use. Hence the volume is so small that it can be put into the pocket. Every statute is accompanied by a short explanatory introduction and notes on sections that require elucidation, or reference to other statutes. The index is very copious, and the price small; for a few shillings the lawyer can thus obtain in the most compact and convenient form for reference, all the statute law of the session which he is ever likely to require for use in his office or in the courts.

LEGAL OBITUARY.

GEORGE COODE, Esq.

THIS gentleman lately died at Walmer, near Deal, Kent. He was by profession a barrister-at-law and Parliamentary draftsman, but for many years he had been employed in official and special capacities, in which he showed abilities of a very high and varied kind, evidences of which may be found in the Report of Local Taxation and Digest of the Laws relating to twenty-four Local Taxes; in his Treatise on Legislative Expression; in his Report on the Law of Settlement; in his Papers on the Consolidation of the Law; in his Report of the Fire Insurance Duties; in his Memorandum on the Application of Limited Liability in Joint-Stock Banks; in his article on the Income Tax in the Edinburgh Review; in his work on the National Debt; as well as in sundry articles in the Jurist, and the Law Review and other papers. Throughout his employments in the Poor Law Commissions from 1834 to 1848, as assistant secretary, during which he had the legal conduct of the business of the Commission, and in his subsequent special employment in various commissions and occasional public inquiries and services, his logical aptitude and mastery of practical affairs were much appreciated by the eminent public men who were engaged with him on those occasions.

G. W. BARKER, ESQ.

The late George William Barker, Esq., of Stanlake-park, near Twyford, Berks, Barrister-at-Law, who died on the 10th ult., was the eldest son of the late George Barker, Esq., of Stanlake-park, (who was high sheriff of Berks in 1856, and who died in Nov. 1868), by Emma Sophia, eldest daughter of Frederic G. Prescott, Esq., of Theobalds-park, Herts. He was born in 1832, was educated at Rugby and at Christ Church, Oxford, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1857. He was a magistrate for Berks, and was formerly an officer in the Berks militia, with which regiment he served at Corfu during the Crimean war. The deceased gentleman's family is a branch of the Barkers of Fairford, in the county of Gloucester, who were in the early part of the sixteenth century merchants at Bristol, and who were seated at Fairford before the time of Queen Elizabeth. The late Mr. Barker, who was unmarried, succeeded in his estate by his brother, the Rev. Alfred Gresley Barker, rector of Sherfield, Hants.

J. HOGG, ESQ., F. R. S.

The late John Hogg, Esq., F.R.S., F.L.S., &c., barrister-at-law, of Norton-house, Stockton-on-Tees, co. Durham, who died on the 16th ult., in the seventieth year of his age, was the second son of the late John Hogg, Esq., barrister-at-law, and a deputy lieutenant for co. Durham, by Penderitia, eldest daughter of the Rev. Watkin Jones, rector of Derwen, co. Denbigh. He was born in the year 1800, and was educated at Durham, and at St. Peter's College, Cambridge, where he graduated B.A., in 1822, and proceeded M.A. in 1827, and of which he was a scholar and fellow. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1832, and became a member of the Northern Circuit. According to the "County Families," Mr. Hogg's family is the remaining branch of two ancient lines of gentry in the county palatine of Durham, named Hogg, or Hoog, or Hoodg, originally of Scottish descent, settled at Norton and Wolviston, and Jefferson, of Durham, Elton, and Norton. The deceased gentleman, who was a magistrate for co. Durham, and many years Vice-President of the Royal Society of Literature, married, in 1850, Anne Louisa Sarah, second daughter of the late Major Goldfinch, of the Priory, Chawton Mendip, and by her, who died in 1864, he has left issue.

WILLIAM JOHN LAW.

(From the Times.)

We announced a few days since the death of Mr. William John Law, the last Chief Commissioner of the old Insolvent Court, before bankrupt tradesmen and insolvent debtors were fused into one crude mass by Lord Westbury's hasty legislation. Mr. Law was a not distinguished member of the distinguished family which in the two preceding generations had furnished three bishops and one of the great Chief Justices of England, and in his own has shown in the same person the stateliest Governor-General of India and the most eloquent orator of the House of Lords. For the last few years of his life growing infirmities had kept Mr. William Law closely at home; but few of those who previously met him in London society could fail to discover in his conversation the vigour of a strong individual character, and mental powers much above the average. All who dealt with him as a public servant in his judicial capacity found him a remarkably hard-working and intelligent lawyer, possessed of a thorough practical mastery of the branch of justice which he skilfully administered for many years. To those who knew him personally outside of his court in Portugal-street he was a kind and genial acquaintance, or a firm and enthusiastic friend. He possessed a singular width of highly cultivated tastes, and a general keenness of interest and enjoyment which lightened the labours of a busy life. Among his gifts were a true ear and a thorough delight in first-rate music, and, though no violinist himself, he was well-known as a connoisseur of the tone and the genuineness of a Stradivarius or Amati. He never betted a sixpence on a horserace, yet he knew the Racing Calendar almost by heart; and, until positively prevented by old age, he never missed seeing the Derby run, and would discuss the race and the winner afterwards with a truer sportsman's interest than most of those who had won or lost their thousands. When at Oxford, in the first decade of the century, he was a student of Christ Church, and a University prizeman for Latin verse, and his fondness for classical topics and classical languages never declined. In later years he was habitually prone to turn into correct and elegant Latin such pieces of contemporary English poetry as particularly struck or touched him, and some of his friends probably still possess graceful original epigrams in the same language suggested by the current topics or amusements of the day. In his 80th year he re-arranged, completed, and published a voluminous treatise on the passage of Hannibal over the Alps, which had formed the recreation and employment of rare intervals from business during many official years. Its exhaustive research and luminous argument are worthy of a German scholar at his best, and it is rare among ourselves to find a man of so advanced an age in whom a long course of professional work has not absorbed the vivid interest in such abstruse problems of history which is a necessary condition for working them out to perfection.

The great characteristic of William Law's mind was a passionate zeal for accuracy and truth, carried into every incidental pursuit and pastime as earnestly as into the most serious business of life. Of a painstaking and instinctively judicial habit in balancing his judgments on the rights of a question, he became, when that judgment was once formed, almost contemptuously intolerant of any contrary conclusion of which the premises seemed to him so clearly untenable as to raise any presumption of dishonesty in those who maintained it. He failed to make due allowance for the immeasurable power of stupidity, or for the obstinacy with which many a mind gifted with an incomplete power of appreciating facts is apt to cling to a foregone conclusion. He possessed, in short to a high degree the qualities which go to make a vigorous polemical writer. In domestic relations he was all kindness and playfulness, and full of the deepest and warmest feelings. His uniform cheerfulness and energy, and his great variety of interests, joined to a perfect modesty which always placed him on the level of those who talked with him, made him a peculiarly pleasant companion to younger men than himself. But the ruling and supreme principle of character which must have struck all, young and old, who knew him was, as has been noted above his fervid appreciation of the absolute importance of truth in all things.

PROMOTIONS & APPOINTMENTS

[N.B.—Announcements of appointments being in the nature of advertisements, are charged 2s. 6d. each, for which postage stamps should be inclosed.]

Whitehall, Saturday, Oct. 9.—The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto Sydney Smith Bell, Esq., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

Mr. Edward Bromley, of 43, Bedford-row, in the county of Middlesex, has been appointed by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, a perpetual commissioner for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women in and for the county of Middlesex, also in and for the city and liberties of Westminster and the City of London.

LAW SOCIETIES.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

ECONOMY AND TRADE.

Mr. Serjeant Cox read a paper on "Legislation for Trades Unions." He said that the right of workmen to associate for regulating the terms and conditions on which their labour shall be supplied to employers was now generally admitted, and the only question to be determined was, What should be the form of the recognition? The trade societies asked for power to put themselves under the Friendly Societies Acts, and for a repeal of the Combination Laws. But the objection to the former claim is, that those acts are framed strictly for associations whose funds are wholly applied to benevolent purposes, and whose rules cannot in any way affect others than themselves. They are therefore inapplicable to trade societies, whose primary object is not charity. His proposition was to give to them the highest form of legal recognition, with a proportionate amount of responsibility. He suggested that trade societies should be incorporated after the manner of joint-stock companies, with a common seal, with power to sue and be sued in the corporate name, with a memorandum of association specifying the objects, and articles of association containing the rules for the government, of the society, the necessary publicity being the best preventive of any abuse of these powers. They should have the same powers as companies to make bye-laws and to recover subscriptions from their members. If combining the objects of a friendly society, the rules relating to such society to be distinct from the general rules, and with the tables of subscription to be approved by the barrister in like manner. To provide against the abuse of such large powers, he proposed further to repeal the existing Combination Act, and by "The Trades Societies Incorporation Act," as he suggested that it should be called, that the lawful objects of such society should be specifically defined, namely, the right of any number of persons to agree together to sell their labour and skill upon any terms and conditions they may be pleased to impose, and the Act should further specifically prohibit by penalties the interference in any manner with the equal liberty of any persons, not members of the society, to sell their own skill and labour on any terms they please. He made those suggestions merely as an outline of a scheme of legislation for trade societies, leaving the details to the draftsman of a Bill that should embody them.

This gave rise to a sharp debate, in which some working men, members of trades unions in Bristol, took part. Two speakers objected to the plan of the learned serjeant that it proposed to give the sanction of the law to trades unions, instead of putting them down, as they should be.

Mr. HOLYOAKE said that he was well acquainted with the leaders of the unions, and he could venture to say for them that they desired no other regulation than the protection of the law for their funds. They did not want incorporation or registration; if they had the sanction of the law they would be required to observe rules prescribed by the law, and that would fetter their free action. (Hear, hear.) They asked to be let alone.

Mr. Serjt. Cox said that was precisely his argument. He asserted that trades unions were a great fact; they existed, and would not cease to exist; they could not be put down, even if it were desirable to do so, a proposition he altogether disputed. There was a great deal of good in them, and his object was to encourage the good, and to check, as far as possible, abuses. Mr. Holyoake's objection to his plan was the very reason that recommended it: it involved responsibility as well as power. Even if the unions were evils, which he denied, prudence would counsel the policy of recognising them, and by so doing subjecting them to control. It was not wisdom to close the eyes to facts, however disagreeable they may be. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. HOLT, a working man, said that it might appear presumption in him to join the debate, but as a member of the largest and richest of the trades unions, he wished to state their case. He then proceeded to describe the flourishing condition of his union, and the advantages it gave to its members in sickness, old age, or when out of work. Their funds were, it was true, liable to contribute to support a strike, but strikes did not occur so often as was supposed. The trade of a single town could not strike; it must obtain the consent, first, of the province and then of the general council, and it was only adopted in the last resort, when all other means had failed. (Hear, hear.) He and his friends had listened with great interest to Mr. Serjeant Cox's paper, and he begged for himself and his friends to thank the learned serjeant for the interest he had taken in them, not only now but when he was in the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) His objection to the plan was that they did not want to have any laws made for them. They could do very well as they were. The law could not help them, and it might hamper them. They possessed power, and they meant to use it—but in a lawful manner. He wanted to know if Mr. Serjeant Cox proposed to prevent moral suasion.

Mr. Serjeant Cox said he meant what he had said, that recognising as he did to the full, the right of men to combine for the selling of their labour at any wages and on any terms and conditions it pleased them to impose, he recognised also the equal right of every individual workman to sell his labour in the like manner, and that any attempt to impede, injure, or annoy him in any manner in the exercise of his individual freedom, was an offence that should be prevented, if possible, by punishment. He did not contemplate punishing "moral suasion," whatever that might be; but it would be difficult to define it in a statute, and a jury would best determine if an act complained of was such an annoyance as to impede the free exercise of the rights of the individual working-man. (Hear, hear.)

The Rev. Canon GIRDLESTONE said that he recognised much that was good in trades' unions, and the suggestions of Mr. Serjeant Cox appeared to him to deserve serious consideration.

REFORMATORY AND REPRESSION OF CRIME.

PROFESSIONAL CRIME.

This section was presided over by Sir Eardley Wilmot. There were three papers set down to be read, the first of which was Mr. Serjt. Cox's on "Professional Crime." He said it had fallen to his lot to be the first judge on whom had been imposed the duty of putting in force the Habitual Criminals Act, and that experience had exhibited some of its defects, which it was the purpose of this paper to describe, in the hope that they may be remedied during the next session of Parliament. The inaccuracies were doubtless due to the haste with which the Bill was passed through the House of Commons; but the defects he proposed now to state. First, he objected to the title of "habitual" criminals, as not correctly describing the class against whom this legislation was directed. He preferred the term "professional" criminals, meaning those who made a business of crime; this class of criminals could only be dealt with by making crime unprofitable. Mercy was thrown away upon them, and reformation hopeless; short imprisonment, even for a first offence, was useless. The requirement is to separate the class of criminals in contemplation of the law from casual criminals. For this purpose a former conviction, or even three convictions, is no sufficient test. An habitual pilferer is not always, and, on the contrary, he is rarely, a professional thief. How, then, may the fact of his being a professional thief be ascertained? He proposed that it should be made a specific offence; that it should be charged in the indictment; and after a conviction for the particular crime that the jury should try the further charge that the prisoner was a professional thief. That this should be proved by the evidence of the police and others as to his antecedents and manner of life; that the prisoner be permitted to answer this charge by evidence, showing what his employments had been; and by his own examination on oath, if he is willing to tender himself. On the jury finding the charge proved, the same consequence should follow as for a former conviction: he should be sentenced to a long term of penal servitude, and to police supervision for life. He suggested, also, that in all cases the fact of a former conviction should be made known to a jury, as by the new Act it is in the case of receivers, and he added that a great difficulty with judges, and with magistrates especially, was what to do with boys guilty of small offences. He would give power to order a good whipping with a birch in all such cases instead of sending them to prison, and would not limit it to sixteen, but in some cases extend it to adults of twenty-one years.

Sir C. RAWLINSON (Upton-on-Severn) late a judge in India, though agreeing with the learned serjeant in some of the views enunciated in the paper, would ask if any of them present knew of any magistrate who was able to cross-examine an astute policeman, who often defeated even learned counsel. He was sorry to find amongst them a great desire to carry a conviction and a disposition to conspire for that end. On that account he would not place power in their hands to accuse whom they chose. He thought it would be best to send such cases as Mr. Serjeant Cox had mentioned before a jury.

Mr. GORST (London) was in favour of a limited use of whipping.

Mr. E. S. ROBINSON spoke the opinion of the magistrates in Bristol when he said they would be very glad if they were enabled to flog boys who were brought before them for first offences, and occasionally young men of the age of twenty, instead of sending them to the contamination of a gaol.

Mr. PARKER, manager of the Kingswood Reformatory, thought it would be well if they could send young thieves back to their former associates with marks on their backs that would be seen by Tom, and Bill, and Jack, so as to lessen the heroic estimation in which young predators were held.

After some remarks from Mr. Upcott, Col. Radcliffe, and the President.

Mr. Serjeant Cox replied to the arguments against the principles of his paper, and said there could be no difficulty in finding out the professional thieves, as they were almost entirely confined to our largest towns. It was only those who made a profession of thieving, and had escaped detection previously, he wanted to catch, and he wanted to subject them to some such punishment as other criminals after previous convictions.

Sir J. BOWRING made a few remarks, and the President having summed up, the following resolutions were adopted: "That the Habitual Criminals Bill of last Session is not sufficiently comprehensive to have due effect in the repression of professional crime;" and "That the magistrates should have power in certain cases of young persons summarily convicted on a first offence to substitute flogging for imprisonment."

INFANTICIDE.

In the Section for the Repression of Crime, Sir Eardley Wilmot presided, and the special question for discussion was "Can Infanticide be diminished by Legislative Enactment?" Dr. E. Lankester, coroner for the Central Division of Middlesex, read the first paper, and dwelt at considerable length on the extent of the crime of infanticide in England and Wales as indicated by the returns of inquests in the Judicial Statistics published by Government. He pointed out that infanticide prevailed not among the upper classes, not among the middle lower class, not among women of the working class, because they were well under observation. It was chiefly—almost only—among that class of women not observed—the women who could conceal their condition, and who could be alone when the child was born. During the last seven years he had held inquests on the average on seventy-one of these children per year. Wherever wilful neglect was proved he directed juries to return verdicts of wilful murder. In the present state of the law he contended that infanticide seldom met with punishment, and the most absurd, unscientific, and ignorant views were taken as to how the child came by its death in order to save the woman's life when she was sent for trial. He expressed the opinion that our legislation of the past seventy-five years had rather encouraged this crime. In Central Middlesex the average yearly number of inquests held in which verdicts of "wilful murder" had been returned in cases of newly-born infants was 1 in every 15,000 of the population; and if infanticide were as frequent in all other parts of England and Wales the total number of children murdered would have been 1420. Dr. Lankester complained that the Judicial Statistics did not furnish sufficient information, as the column of verdicts in which "Wilful Murder" was returned did not state whether the children were newly born or not. The "Found Dead" column contained all the open verdicts, but applying the Middlesex results to England and Wales, and taking into consideration the fact that the greater number of cases in which verdicts of found dead were returned the verdict was found under the same circumstances as those in which verdicts of wilful murder were returned in Middlesex, they found that the total number amounted to the aggregate of 2824. From deductions he made he brought the total number of "newly-born" children found dead and unclaimed as above 2500. Reducing this number by 20 per cent. for accidents, they still had the startling number of upwards of 2000. This startling fact showed that the crime of destroying newly-born children in other parts of the country was more common than in Middlesex. He thought that these unfortunate women should not be allowed to conceal their condition—should not be allowed to be alone at the time of their confinement.

Mr. H. SAFFORD read a paper in which he contended that an Act of Parliament should be passed authorising charitable societies to receive illegitimate children, and to proceed before a magistrate against both the father and the mother for the support of these institutions. In the discussion which followed,

Dr. LANKESTER thought we might learn a good deal from foreign countries. In Prussia there were heavy penalties for burying a child without the knowledge of the magistrate.

Dr. M'MILLAN, Colonel C. Ratcliffe, and Mr. T. W. Saunders took part in the discussion, the latter gentleman (Recorder of Bath) advocating that the law should be altered to admit of juries returning a verdict of "guilty of infanticide" in the common acceptance of the term of child-killing at about the child's birth, and thus a larger measure of punishment would be awarded the crime, keeping it apart from the aspect in which the law at present treated it. Colonel Ratcliffe advocated a penal law for the fathers.

Dr. ELIZABETH BLACKWELL, New York, thought it would be very injurious to enact any severe measures relative to women, as it would tend at once to produce the crime of abortion—a great and increasing crime in America, where men were constantly found bringing women to "abortionists" to produce this crime, with which the crime of infanticide was not to be compared as to its enormous evils. Her second point was the great advantage of private charities for cases of women guilty of infanticide, and she sketched the working of her society in New York.

Dr. GREEN, of Bristol, advocated the present humane administration of the law, and expressed the opinion that in the majority of instances the child simply died from the absence of necessary assistance. He broadly stated his belief that no woman of sound mind wilfully destroyed her offspring. It was done in the desperation of the moment.

Mrs. MEREDITH related instances where young girls systematically murdered their children, and learnt from their companions the art of committing this crime.

Dr. Lankester, in reply, thought that the work-house should be the needed asylum if conducted differently from what it was at present, and with gentlemen and ladies of refined feelings as masters and matrons of them, instead of unsuccessful tradesmen or favoured butlers. He thought the law by which the capital sentence was given for infanticide should be abolished, although heavy punishment should be awarded. He thought it could be diminished by legislation.

Sir EARDLEY WILMOT summed up the discussion, and left the following questions to the section:—Is the section of opinion that infanticide should no longer be punishable with death, and, if possible, so far to alter the law as to make the seducer liable to it? Ultimately the section made the following recommendations:—That the punishment of death for infanticide by the mother at the time of birth be discontinued; the registration of still-born infants; and that the Home Secretary should publish in the coroners' judicial statistics the number of newly-born children found in the streets, on which inquests have been held.

THE Law and the Lawyers.

The Chief Justiceship of the Island of Trinidad is vacant by the death of the Hon. G. W. KNOX, who had held the appointment for twenty years. It is worth 1500*l.* per annum.

The Northern Circuit has lost another leader. Not very long since Mr. EDWARD JAMES died suddenly; he was followed by Mr. STEPHEN TEMPLE; and now Mr. THOMAS JONES is struck down by apoplexy. It is somewhat remarkable that the first and last died during the Long Vacation. Mr. JONES, indeed, had returned to work, but his holiday terminated only a few days before his death. His age was fifty-seven. He practised until he was thirty-five as a special pleader, and he was twenty years at the Bar before he attained silk. He was a sound lawyer, but little of an advocate. The members of his circuit held him in very high esteem; but he was equally kind to all men at the Bar who sought his advice, and especially to the young. On his circuit his loss will be long felt.

We notice below the points in the dispute between counsel and the commissioners at Beverley, but we have not there referred to the dilemma in which the commissioners were placed in attempting to remove counsel from the court. The very contention was that the commission was legally defunct; this being so, the power to punish contempt conferred by section 12 of the Act was gone; and any constable or bailiff who ventured to lay a finger upon counsel would have made himself liable to an action of trespass. Further, as to the right of counsel to be present, an argument was addressed to the commissioners which does not appear in the report, to the effect that the right existed on two grounds, first, that the Commissioners' Court being to all intents and purposes a court sitting at Nisi Prius, there is a right inherent in the Bar to attend; and, secondly, on the ground that they were the representatives of a person summoned before the court. This point probably will never be argued; the other, relating to the legality of the proceedings of the commissioners, must be settled by competent authority within a short time.

THE Right Hon. JOHN EDWARD WALSH, Master of the Rolls in Ireland, died in Paris on Tuesday. The right hon. gentleman was in the fifty-third year of his age, was called to the Bar in Ireland in 1839, obtained a silk gown in 1857, became Attorney-General for Ireland in 1866, was in the same year elected M.P. for the University of Dublin, and having represented the University for a short time was appointed Master of the Rolls.

THE SKIRMISH AT BEVERLEY.

THE scene in the Bribery Commissioners' Court at Beverley, when Mr. Serjt. SLEIGH, Mr. MORGAN HOWARD, and Mr. CHARLES EDWARDS objected to the jurisdiction, seems to have been remarkable. The learned serjeant's objection was that only two commissioners were present when the court was adjourned until the day on which counsel appeared, and that, under the statute and upon a series of authorities then upon the table, the adjournment was invalid by reason of the absence of one of the three commissioners. The Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 57) says that "in case any of the commissioners so appointed die, resign, or become incapable to act, it shall be lawful for the surviving or continuing commissioners or commissioner to act in such inquiry as if they or he had been solely appointed to be commissioners or a commissioner for the purposes of such inquiry." Unless, therefore, death, resignation, or incapacity, prevent the attendance of a commissioner, it would seem to be unlawful for the court to proceed in his absence. We do not propose to discuss these points; but we are informed by those who have examined the matter that it is one fatally affecting the validity of the proceedings of the court.

We may mention that the object which Sir HENRY EDWARDS had in view in objecting to the jurisdiction was this: The commissioners had refused to call him as a witness, and consequently his only means of clearing his character is by prosecuting witnesses for perjury; but this he could not do if the court before which the perjury was committed was not properly constituted, and had not, therefore, legal power to administer a binding oath. This is a point of view from which the commissioners have probably not looked at the subject, but it is clearly one of very considerable importance.

A writer in the Globe, on Thursday evening, dating from the Temple, and signing himself "A Lover of Judicial Dignity," reminds us of the course taken on an analogous occasion. He writes:—"They (the commissioners) would have been wiser to have followed the example of the Lisburn Election Committee, whose decision must be fresh in the memory of most men. Then, an illegal adjournment had been made under circumstances somewhat similar to the present case. It was argued that the court had become functus officio. Its members retired to consider the question, and, having returned, announced their conviction that the objection was valid. Had Her Majesty's commissioners at Beverley followed this precedent, retired and conferred upon the point, it would have been a course far more dignified to themselves, far more manly and straightforward towards the counsel who were before them, and far more just and equitable towards the public. If the objection is valid, their opposition will have been useless, they will be none the less holding an illegal court, with no power to report their proceedings. The borough cannot be called upon to refund the expenses of the present inquiry. For their own credit, then, and for that of the legal Profession, it is to be hoped that they will take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown with as little delay as possible."

These are sentiments which the entire Profession will fully indorse.

THE CROWN AND THE CHURCH.

THE opposition to the appointment of Dr. TEMPLE to the see of Exeter has raised a discussion as to the power which the Crown possesses in such matters. We are enabled to investigate the subject without much trouble, owing to the recent publication of the third volume of Mr. FINLASON's very valuable edition of Reeves. It is stated in the text at p. 246, that the King's supremacy was made complete by 26 Hen. 8, c. 1, by which it was enacted that the king shall be taken as "the only supreme head in earth of the church, called Anglicana Ecclesia; and shall have all authority thereto annexed, to reform and correct all errors, heresies, and abuses which may be amended by any spiritual jurisdiction whatsoever."

In a note Mr. FINLASON remarks that the statutes transferred to the King the Pope's authority, that is to say, not only a temporal, but a spiritual authority; and he points out that in Bale's case, which came before the court in the reign of James I, the court affirmed that the Irish statute—very similar to the English one—which gave authority to the Queen and her successors to create bishops by their patents, without congé d'elire, did not give any new power, but was only a restitution of the common law, and that the King before the statute might create a bishop without any writ of congé d'elire, which was but a form of ceremony the Kings of the realm had agreed to observe: (O'Brien v. Knivan, Cro. Jac. 552.) Mr. FINLASON goes on to say, "This was no doubt the high prerogative doctrine of the Tudors and Stuarts; and it was reasserted in the same reign in a case in which it was held that the King, by virtue of the royal supremacy at common law, could make orders and constitutions for the government of the clergy, without the authority of Parliament, to deprive them if they disobeyed; so that the Crown at common law, according to this doctrine, had all the power the Pope ever claimed, and had full power to alter or declare or define faith, morals and worship; and the authority of Parliament was necessary to restrain and not to constitute the prerogative." (Cro. Jac. 37.)

At a subsequent page our author traces the descent of the religious supremacy and its exercise in the government of the Church. Referring to the reign of Edward VI. (p. 447), he says, "It is impossible not to perceive that in this reign the system of rule which had prevailed under Henry was continued . . . that clergy and laity were alike subdued and subservient and enslaved under an ascendancy of royal authority which amounted to perfect and absolute tyranny. The Parliament empowered the King to compile a body of canon laws which were to be valid though never ratified by Parliament. . . . The bishops had been compelled to take commissions in which it was declared that they held their sees during the King's pleasure only." Further, at page 573, he writes, "The ecclesiastical policy of Elizabeth was in thorough consistency with that of her sister, her brother, and her father. It consisted simply of the assertion of the royal supremacy in spiritual not less than in temporal matters, 'The Act by which the ecclesiastical revolution was accomplished,' says Sir J. MACKINTOSH, 'consisted of the revival of all the statutes of Henry VIII. against foreign jurisdiction, which, in imitation of that monarch's equivocal language, they called restoring the ancient jurisdiction of the Crown over the state ecclesiastical: (1 Eliz. c. 6) . . . All spiritual jurisdiction was by the same Act annexed to the Crown, and the sovereign was empowered to exercise it by commissioners appointed under the Great Seal." And, at page 574, we find it stated in a full and luminous continuation of the note from which we have just quoted, that "whoever denied the supremacy or attempted to deprive the Queen of that prerogative, forfeited for the first offence all his goods and chattels, for the second was subjected to the penalty of a procurmure, but the third offence was declared treason. . . . A law was passed confirming all the statutes enacted in King Edward's time with regard to religion. The nomination of bishops was given to the Crown without any election by the chapters."

We think it may be taken without further discussion that the licence to the dean and chapter is a mere ceremony. From the quotations which we have made from Mr. FINLASON's notes to Reeves, it is clear that the statutes of Henry VIII. being revived in the reign of Elizabeth, are still in force, and 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, says this: "And furthermore be it ordained and established by the authority aforesaid, that at every avoidance of every archbishopric or bishopric within this realm, or in any other the King's dominions, the King our sovereign lord, his heirs and successors, may grant to the prior and convent, or the dean and chapter of the cathedral churches or monasteries where the see of such archbishopric or bishopric shall happen to be void, a licence under the great seal, as of old time hath been accustomed, to proceed to the election of an archbishop or bishop of the see so being void, with a letter missive containing the name of the person which they shall elect and choose; by virtue of which licence the said dean and chapter, or prior and convent, to whom any such licence and letters missive shall be directed, shall with all speed and celerity in due form elect and choose the same person named in the said letters missive to the dignity and office of the archbishopric or bishopric so being void, and none other. And if they do defer or delay their election above twelve days next after such licence or letters missive to them delivered, that then for every such default the King's highness, his heirs and successors, at their liberty and pleasure shall nominate and present, by their letters patent under their Great Seal, such a person to the said office and dignity so being void as they shall think able and convenient for the same."

In the case of the election of Dr. HAMPDEN to the see of Hereford, in 1848, a question was raised very similar to the one which is now being discussed. The facts are somewhat different, inasmuch as in Dr. HAMPDEN's case he had been elected, but at the time of his confirmation, on the usual challenge to all objectors to come forward and be heard being delivered, certain objections on the score of some of the religious tenets alleged to be held by Dr. HAMPDEN, were tendered; but the officers in ministrations refused to receive them. Upon this a rule was obtained by the objectors, in the Court of Queen's Bench, to show cause why a mandamus should not issue to the ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY to receive the objections. The Judges were not unanimous in opinion, but it was decided that the rule should be discharged, the chief ground of the decision being that the congé d'élire was imperative: (11 Q. B.)

In the Statute of Henry VIII. there is a spice of that tyranny, spiritual as well as lay, which Mr. FINLASON frequently remarks upon as characterising the reigns of that monarch and his immediate successors, for if the election by the dean and chapter be the mere ceremonial attendant upon the execution of the royal pleasure, which can be so easily dispensed with in the manner provided by the statute, why impose the penalties of procurmure on the disobedient? It is hard to suppose that these penalties would be inflicted if incurred, but the dean and chapter will be very foolish if they court so ridiculous a martyrdom.

THE PROSECUTION OF THE ALBERT DIRECTORS.

MR. KNOX has dismissed the summons because the prosecutor did not appear in person to submit himself to a cross-examination, which, it was stated, would have revealed the fact that he had passed by another name, that he was a bankrupt not long ago, and that the shares he held were purchased with borrowed money. No other shareholder would accept the responsibility of a prosecution in which it would be necessary to prove, not merely incapacity or reckless expenditure, or rashness on the part of the directors, but that intent to defraud, which constitutes the indictable offence. In this case not the slightest evidence was suggested to show that they made a statement, or that they did so knowing it to be false, and with intent to defraud. If, therefore, the prosecution had proceeded, nothing would have been made of it. The directors did not exceed the powers vested in them by the deed of settlement, and though they acted indiscreetly in paying so large a price for the businesses they bought, they could easily have shown that they were advised in it by competent calculators, and that they believed they had made a good bargain. Shareholders should remember, before they blame directors for the non-success of a speculation, that they knew it to be a speculation when they resolved to take part in it, and that they had no right to anticipate great gain without also hazarding the loss of their stakes. The failure of the Albert was undoubtedly due to its many amalgamations, procured at a cost which did not sufficiently estimate the commission and other expenses attending the transaction. Lord WILLIAM HAY, the chairman of the committee of policy-holders, states that the Alliance had proposed terms which would secure to the policies 75 per cent. of their nominal value. If this can be done, the offer should be at once accepted.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE OFFICE.

THE petition for the winding-up of this company has been dismissed with costs. The principle that governed the decision was very clearly explained by Vice-Chancellor JAMES. A company can be wound-up for inability to pay existing debts. But it was not shown that the office in question had not means to meet all current claims; on the contrary, it was satisfactorily shown that it could pay, not only whatever debts are now due, but all policy claims likely to fall due for many years to come. The contention of the petitioner was, that the company must be ultimately insolvent, because it had not any accumulated fund sufficient to meet the ultimate demands of its entire number of policies. But the Vice-Chancellor very wisely determined that this was a question out of the scope of the Winding-up Act, and which it would be impossible for a court to investigate. It would, indeed, be monstrous if a company could be wound-up merely upon a calculation of future possibilities or impossibilities. Emphatically in such a case would the maxim of "Sufficient unto the day" apply.

We trust that this very righteous judgment, with the heavy costs it will impose upon the petitioners will operate to deter the professional "wreckers" from their unholy enterprises. We know not if any of the promoters of the petition were of the class which has been thus designated; but their fate should operate as a warning. It is well known that there were company makers, professional company amalgamators, and professional company wreckers, and that the three characters were often united in the same person. It is notorious that, since the failure of "The Albert," and the whispers against other offices consequent upon that catastrophe, there has sprung up a small army of vultures who have been prowling about looking for companies to kill, with the hope of preying upon the carcass. To them the snatching of the European from the fate designed for it will be a great discouragement, and if it should have the effect of arresting the operations of the wreckers in other directions, a great public service will have been done.

ELECTION INQUIRIES AND THE PRINCIPLE OF SELF DEFENCE.

THE Beverley Commissioners have distinguished themselves in many ways, and, amongst others, in placing Mr. SPOFFORTH in a light before the public in which no professional adviser doing his duty according to the ordinary rules of practice, and in accordance with the law of England, ought to be placed. A reflection was cast upon him because he advised persons who had been engaged in election matters, and who were anxious that what they had done in the excitement of a contest should not be subjected to the investigation of three zealous barristers, armed with inquisitorial powers, that they were justified in assisting themselves by destroying any evidence in their possession which might criminate them. The comments made upon this proceeding on the part of Mr. SPOFFORTH, acting, be it remembered, as a professional adviser, have called forth two letters on different sides of the question both from lawyers, one anonymous, but emanating, as we know, from a gentleman very eminent in his branch of the Profession, and the other from Mr. BOYD KINNEAR. The points taken are these:—

The anonymous writer says that if—"which Heaven forbid"—he was ever called upon to advise some terrified possessor of dangerous papers, in prospect of an election inquiry, he should feel bound to say to him, "These papers appear to be your own private property, the law allows you to do what you like with them, and imposes no penalty on their destruction. As one of the public, you are called on to assist the law by their production. You will proclaim them to be criminating if you do not produce them. But, as a person implicated, you have both legally and morally a right of self-defence. It is for you to judge whether your danger compels you to exercise it." Mr. KINNEAR says that the advice of an upright friend, whether lawyer or not, ought to be: "You say you have broken the law; then in point of morality your duty is to confess the offence and accept the penalty. You have no moral right to escape punishment by concealment of your crime. The law of England, however, fearing you may be a liar, will not compel you to answer any question about your guilt, and if you choose to avail yourself of a defence founded on that hypothesis you may destroy any evidences of your guilt which may be in your power."

The first writer shows clearly that there is no legal obligation resting upon anyone affected by an election inquiry to produce papers until the receipt of the summons: "Up to that moment, if the documents are not held in trust for other parties, the owner is at liberty to deal with them as he chooses. If he destroys them he exposes himself to misconstruction, which he may not be able to clear, and to a strong presumption of their adverse contents. But the destruction before summons received is not prohibited by law nor subject to any legal penalty. This, I apprehend, is the answer to the legal question."

On the question of moral obligation this writer is equally clear that any man is morally justified in his own self-defence in destroying incriminating papers. He points out that in all cases of this nature two conflicting rights come into collision—the right of the State to investigate a crime, and the right of the individual to protect himself. "Neither of these rights," he says, "can be safely pushed to an extreme. The unrestrained right of the individual would produce lawlessness, and the unlimited right of the State would produce tyranny." Then as regards the position of the professional adviser, he says, "Is the no-crime of the principal a crime in an adviser? That can hardly be contended. There is no legal penalty on a defendant for destroying, before summons received, his own private papers. Neither is there any penalty on a legal adviser who tells him his right to do so. So, where there is no moral guilt in such an act of a defendant, there can be no moral guilt in such advice of his professional adviser. A professional man, be he barrister or attorney, is not the judge or the bishop of his client, but his advocate. He is bound to put himself in his client's place, to tell him his legal rights, and to advise him to the best of his judgment how he may extricate himself with the least injury."

Stated shortly, the opposing views this: One says a guilty man has the right to protect himself from what the law says shall be the consequences of his acts, and has a right to demand from an advocate the best advice how to do it.

The other says: No guilty person has a right to object to anything by which the simple truth is made known, and no professional man is justified in assisting or defending the guilty.

In our opinion, it is only necessary that we should place these two propositions in juxtaposition to elicit from all our readers the strongest expressions in favour of the first and in condemnation of the second. Indeed, Mr. KINNEAR's morality is utterly Utopian. It makes no account of the infirmities of human nature which the law itself most carefully considers. And in election matters these infirmities appear and produce a result which the law has declared to be a crime, but which really hovers on the boundary line between civil and criminal offences. And there is another feature in these election inquiries which distinguishes them from ordinary criminal trials. The issue involved is not one of guilty or not guilty, as in the case of a trial even before an election Judge; but the commissioners of our day have stretched their powers to the very limits. We hardly like to use the word abuse, but we must say that the opinion of the Profession is that at Beverley and Bridgewater the powers of the commissioners have been strained to the utmost, and knowing what the disposition of the commissioners usually is, we say without hesitation, that it was the bounden duty of a professional adviser to do all that he legally could to protect his client from the dreadful ordeal of examination and cross-examination by three barristers—an ordeal which we venture to say the best of men would shrink from when covered by the restraining presence of a presiding Judge, but which becomes intolerable when uncurbed by any such influence. We have before declared our opinion that these royal inquiries are engines of moral torture opposed to the spirit of our Constitution. As the anonymous correspondent, to whom we have referred, remarks, "In election inquiries the principle of discovery has been developed to the fullest extent, and the older maxims totally disregarded;" and he adds, after citing the statute, "it would scarcely be possible to create a system more completely opposed to the rest of our criminal law." If, then, it is justifiable in ordinary cases within the jurisdiction of our criminal courts for a man to refuse to criminate himself, and to be advised how to defend himself against the consequences of his acts, à fortiori should it be declared justifiable where the process is inquisitorial.

MUNICIPAL AND PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS.

NO. VI.

AGENCY.

THE words used in the Corrupt Practices Act to denote acts which are to affect a member's return are these, "by himself or by any other person on his behalf." In one of the first petitions tried before a Judge (the Norwich Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 615), the effect of these words was considered, and Baron Martin held that they included any person for whom in law the member was responsible, whether he be an agent directly appointed by the member, or whether he be an agent by reason of the construction which has been placed upon the Act of Parliament—a construction which his Lordship remarked is to some extent binding on the Judges. The contention of counsel for the respondent in that case was that the respondent could not be held responsible for an act to which he was not privy. This contention was at once disposed of, and without citing further authority—and every petition tried is an authority on this point—it is to be taken that the candidate must suffer the consequences of the acts of every person for whom he is legally responsible.

The important question which we have now to consider is, what constitutes an agent. And in the first place it should be observed that it was held by Mr. Justice Willes in the Windsor Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 613, that mere employment does not constitute agency, and that therefore bribery by a messenger unauthorised to canvass did not affect the election. Payment for services, indeed, is not an element in the matter at all, for it was held by Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Bewdley Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 676, that it is not necessary that an agent should be paid in order that his act should affect the member's seat. Again, agency is not established by the mere fact of a person's name being on the published list of the committee: (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 24.) But Mr. Justice Willes there said, "If I find a person's name on a committee from the beginning, that he attended meetings of the committee; that he also canvassed, and that his canvass was recognised so far as it went,

I must require considerable argument to satisfy me that he was not an agent within the meaning of the Act of Parliament."

So much for negative decisions. Now as to affirmative, we have the high authority of Mr. Justice Willes for saying that no distinction is to be drawn, as regards agency, between bribery, treating, and undue influence: (21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 990.) His Lordship was at first disposed to exclude treating from the acts done by an agent which should avoid the election, but his conclusion was that the 36th section of the Act must be read literally. Therefore all the corrupt practices stand upon the same footing as regards agency. In the Norwich petition (sup.) we have the strongest evidence of agency, for there the learned Judge held that the agency of a particular individual had been proved "up to the hilt." Three persons stated him to be a canvasser. It was proved that he canvassed in the company of the son of the sitting member, and that on the afternoon of the day of the polling he went to a public-house and bought votes. Further, as to canvassing, Mr. Justice Willes in the Guildford Petition, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 729, said (p. 732), "as a rule agency to bind the member would be agency to canvass or to procure votes on his behalf." He made the further remark which we do not fully appreciate, that agency may, under the new system, assume a novel form in which it may be necessary for the court to recognise it.

Now arises the question what is authority to canvass?

In the Windsor Petition (sup.) Mr. Justice Willes said "an authority for the general management of an election would involve an authority to canvass." And in making that observation his Lordship remarks that he purposely used the word "authority" and not "employment," because he intended to refer to persons who were not paid for their services. It is quite clear, of course, as remarked by Mr. Justice O'Brien in the Londonderry Petition (Printed Judgments, Part II., p. 252), that no mere supporter of a candidate who chooses to ask for votes, and to make speeches in his favour, can force himself upon the candidate as an agent. In the Westbury petition, Mr. Justice Willes said the act done to affect the candidate must be done by his procurement, and held it immaterial whether a desire that a person should canvass be expressed or implied, by words or by actions. And the learned Judge, in that case, gave a definition of canvassing. "Canvassing," he said, "may be either by asking a man to vote for the candidate for whom you are canvassing, or by begging him not to go to the poll, but to remain neutral, and not to vote for the adversary. No distinction can be drawn except in the amount of favour between voting for a man and abstaining from voting for his adversary. That such is the law appears from the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, which places on the same footing inducing a man to vote at an election and inducing a man to abstain from voting."

The question of What is agency? was much discussed in the Staleybridge Petition (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. at pp. 76, 77), especially with reference to the acts of volunteers. One of the counsel there urged that the responsibility of the candidate should be limited in the case of volunteers, that the petitioners should be bound to show some authorising on the part of the candidate to the person whose acts are sought to be made available against him. In his judgment Mr. Justice Blackburn considered the arguments addressed to him, and went fully into the matter. And first he noticed a mode of constituting a person an agent, which he had held in the Bewdley case (sup.) to be most effective, that is so as to make the candidate responsible not only for the acts of the person so appointed, but for the acts of those whom that person might employ as his agents. Sir R. Glass put money into the hands of a person at Bewdley, and exercised no supervision as to how it was to be expended, simply giving directions that it should not be expended illegally. The Judge came to the conclusion that there was such an agency established as to make the candidate responsible to the fullest extent. The evidence did not go so far as this in the Staleybridge case, but the learned Judge held that the mere act of taking the committee rooms by the volunteer committee amounted to evidence that the sitting member and his people did request those committees to bring up voters when they could, and consequently that the persons who, joining those volunteer committees, went and fetched voters, were in one sense employed by the sitting member to bring up voters.

In this same case Mr. Justice Blackburn takes occasion to say that he does not think the principle that a person employed to canvass makes the candidate responsible for his acts, laid down by Mr. Justice Willes in the Windsor case, can be accepted as a hard and fast line. "As a general proposition," he said, "that would go a great way towards saying who is an agent, but I don't think we can take it as an absolute hard and fast rule, on which we can say that wherever a case of corruption has been brought home to a person who was within this limit, the seat should be vacated. The effect of that would be to say that wherever there were volunteers who were acting at all and whose voluntary acting was not repudiated by the candidate nor his agents; wherever, in fact, a person came forward and said, 'I will act for you and endeavour to assist you,' and the candidate or his agent said, 'I am very much obliged to you, sir; any corrupt or improper act done by the volunteer, although unconnected with the member, would render the election void.' "At present," his Lordship added, "I cannot go further than to say that each case must be considered upon the whole facts taken together, and it must be determined in that way whether the relation between the person guilty of the corrupt practice and the member was such as to make the latter fairly responsible for it." This is equivalent to saying that no general rule can be laid down on the question of authority by implication; but his Lordship said later on that in drawing the inference the reason of the rule which makes a candidate responsible for the unauthorised acts of his authorised agent should be borne in mind.

It seems to be agreed by all the Judges that in considering the question of agency the nature of the acts done by the alleged agent are most material. In the Staleybridge judgment, from which we have been quoting, Mr. Justice Blackburn said that "whenever it appears that the things are numerous done it would go very far to show that the agents did come within that principle upon which the law is founded, viz., that they were persons, the benefit of whose foul play the member was to get, and therefore it would be right that he should forfeit his seat in consequence." The same learned Judge further considered this question in the Hastings petition, which we report this week. His Lordship there says, "I have frequently had it in my mind that there is great difficulty, in strict logic, in making the agency of a person dependent upon the extent of the corrupt practices committed by him. It does seem that in strict logic, if a man would be an agent if he was shown to have corrupted one hundred people by paying them 5s. a piece, then if he corrupts only a single man by giving him a single glass of beer, he ought to be regarded as an agent equally. There is no doubt, in strict logical language, you will find a difficulty in making the distinction, yet I cannot but feel that, in administering justice and in administering the law in such a way that it would be tolerable one must make some distinction of that sort. There is the same thing that constitutes a man an agent in the one case present also in the other case; but I cannot but feel that where the case is a small isolated solitary case, it requires much more evidence to satisfy one of agency than would otherwise be necessary. If a small thing is done by the head agent . . . the agent for the election expenses, I think that would have upset the election; and if small things to a considerable extent were done by a subordinate person, comparatively slight evidence of agency would probably have induced one to find that he was an agent."

This, we think, may be taken to be the view adopted by the Election Judges, and having disposed of the mode in which an individual agent may be constituted, we will proceed to the question of the agency of associated supporters. In the Westminster Petition, at p. 246 of 19 L. T. Rep. N. S., Baron Martin deals with the point, observing that he could not suppose that where an association of persons numbering 600 or 700 members, chooses to call itself a committee, that therefore they become the agents of a candidate for the purpose of making him responsible for a wrong act or an illegal act done by them. And subsequently he defined a committeeman. "The committeeman," he said, "whom I mean, and for whom I would hold Mr.

Smith responsible, is a committeeman in the ordinary intelligible sense of the word, that is to say, a person in whom faith is put, and for whose acts he is responsible." Nothing more need be said as regards this, we having noticed the subject of the agency of political associations incidentally in discussing the Wigan and Tamerton cases under "Candidate and Agent." Suffice it to say that it must be taken as established that there is no partnership privity between the parties subscribing to a political association; nor does the fact of subscribing confer any authority upon the person who manages it to make them responsible for an illegal act done by him.

There is another point which deserves notice, and which was prominently discussed in the Blackburn petition, namely, the effect of a circular issued to the overseers, managers, and tradesmen having influence over workpeople, in constituting them agents.

We think it important that this circular should be set out. It ran as follows:

Blackburn, Oct. 12th 1868.

Dear Sir,—At a very influential meeting of the Conservative party, held at the Registration-rooms, Clayton-street, on the 8th inst., for the purpose of making arrangements for securing the return of Messrs. Wm. Henry Horaby and Joseph Fielden as the representatives of the Parliamentary borough at the ensuing election, the gravity and importance of the crisis in our national history at which the election occurs was very prominently referred to, and it was decided that all millowners, and their managers and overlookers, and all master tradesmen and others possessing influence, should be strongly urged to exert that influence so as to secure, in the municipal elections as well as in the Parliamentary, the success of the candidates who adhere to the Constitution in Church and State—the Constitution under which the people of this country enjoy freedom and security to a greater extent than is enjoyed by any other nation under the sun—and who are opposed to the levelling principles, demoralising in tendency, which would make Christian England a Godless nation, undermine the stability of the Throne and the security of property, and hasten on an era of anarchy and misrule.

Believing that you know and appreciate the blessings, temporal and religious, secured to this country by the Constitution which is at the present time so violently threatened by unscrupulous politicians, we venture to urge upon you most strongly the necessity of vigorous personal effort, to secure the return, as town councillors, of gentlemen who hold, with respect to national politics, Constitutional principles, and the return to Parliament of our two known and tried representatives, Messrs. W. H. Horaby and Jos. Fielden.

Signed on behalf of the meeting, &c.

This circular was afterwards, in the opinion of the Judge, adopted by the sitting members, and he held that it must be taken as being their act, just as much as if each of them had written a letter to the same effect to every "manager, overlooker, and tradesman, and any other person having influence," in the town of Blackburn. "It is," he said, "a power of attorney, to the extent to which it goes, to every individual in any of those classes, to do that which the circular requests him to do." But his Lordship put some strong limitations on the extent of the agency so created. He said: "Of course it would be prodigious to say that it at once made every overlooker in the place an agent of the Tory candidates. That would be quite out of the question, because if it were so it would follow, in strictness of law, that they would be equally answerable for the acts of the overlookers of the opposite way of thinking, or that they would be liable to be unseated for acts done in bad faith by some person who pretended to be an agent of theirs, for the purpose of betraying them by doing actions which might eventually invalidate the election. Such persons being out of the case, it appears to me that the effect of this circular was to make an agent of every person having authority, down to the last grade, that of overlookers over the hands, and to request and therefore authorise each such to influence the hands who were under him, for the purpose of inducing them to vote for the candidates upon whose behalf this document was issued, and any overlooker, and consequently anybody in that or any higher grade who bona fide took up the Tory side, and who acted upon this circular, and did canvass for the sitting members, became their agent, and his acts did bind them to the extent and under the circumstances which I have already explained in speaking of the first question."

DIGEST OF SHIPPING LAW CASES.

Edited by F. O. CUMPT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

V. EVIDENCE.

7. Lighthouse journals.—Lighthouse journals were admitted by the Court of Admiralty to prove the state of the wind and weather, as registered on board of light-vessel, and the testimony of the person who actually made the entries was dispensed with. The Admiralty Court does not adhere strictly to the common law rules of evidence: (The Maria Das Doras, A. C. Jan. 22, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 306.)

VI. FISHING VESSELS.

8. Collision between sailing vessel and fishing lugger.—Merchant Shipping Act.—Admiralty notice.—Both vessels were held to be in fault, the fishing lugger having neglected to show a light, which there is a nautical obligation upon her to do where it is required for safety to other vessels. But under the Admiralty notice of Oct. 1858, in pursuance of the Merchant Shipping Act, it was held that there was no statutory obligation on fishing vessels to carry lights so as to preclude them from recovering. Damages equally divided: (The Olivia, A. C. May 12 and 13, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 219; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396.)

VII. FOREIGN VESSELS.

9. Damage by foreign ship to barge in Thames.—Jurisdiction.—The Admiralty Court has jurisdiction in a cause of damage by a foreign ship to a barge in the river Thames under 537th and following sections of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854. Under that statute the court has authority not only to arrest the ship but to proceed to judgment: (The Bilbao, A. C. Nov. 3, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 5; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 386.)

10. Limitation of shipowner's liability.—Merchant Shipping Act.—A foreign vessel was sunk by collision with a British ship within three miles of the English coast, and it was held that the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 limited the liability of the owner of the British ship to the value of the ship and freight then earned. Cases of The Argo, 1 Swab. 112; Cope v. Doherty, 4 Kay & J. 367; The Zollverein, 1 W. Rob. 96; The Leda, 1 Swab. 40; and The Fernon, 1 W. Rob. 316, commented upon by the court: (General Iron Screw Collier Company v. Schuurmann and others, V. Ch. C. July 20, 21, 22, and 30, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 60; 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 696; 1 J. & H. 181; 29 L. J. 877; 6 Jur. N. S. 883.)

11. Jurisdiction.—Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 7.—Injury to life or limb.—Lord Campbell's Act.—Citation in rem issued against a foreign ship on behalf of the representatives of men who had lost their lives through collision within three miles of the shore of Great Britain. Lord Campbell's Act applicable in such a case, the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Act 1861 having extended the jurisdiction of the court to questions of damage done by any ship: (The Borodino, A. C. Nov. 12, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 155.)

VIII. IDENTITY.

12. Mistaken identity.—Costs.—Damages.—On the authority of the judgment of the Privy Council in The Evangelismos, Swab. 378, costs were decreed but not damages, where the identity of the ship proceeded against was not proved, but in adopting such proceedings there was neither mala fides "nor such gross negligence as implies malice." (The Active, A. C. Jan. 31, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 191; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 773.)

IX. LIGHTS.

13. Rules of the sea.—A steamer seeing only the white light of a sailing vessel was held not justified in putting her helm to starboard where there was no risk of collision if the two vessels had continued their respective courses: (The Lyra, A. C. Ireland, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 150; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 187.)

14. Merchant Shipping Act.—Admiralty notice.—Fishing vessels.—Notice regarding lights issued by the Admiralty in Oct. 1858, in pursuance of the Merchant Shipping Act, held not to be applicable to fishing vessels, but there is a nautical obligation on them to show lights where required for safety: (The Olivia, A. C. May 12 and 13, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 219; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396.)

15. Order in Council, 27th July 1863.—Merchant Shipping Amendment Act.—Statutory provisions applicable to Bremen and Hamburg vessels under Order in Council, dated 27th July 1863, and Merchant Shipping Amendment Act 1863. Position of lights. Construction of regulations as to carrying red and green lights. Lamps fixed on stands secured to pawlbitts of winlasses and screened to prevent their being seen across the bows, held not to be placed in conformity with the provisions of the statute. Question as to sails preventing the lights from being seen: (The Gustav and The New Ed, A. C. Dec. 4, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 407; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 547.)

16. Affirmative and negative evidence as to carrying lights.—There being two English vessels meeting each other from opposite directions, it is the duty of both vessels to port to avoid a collision, unless some peculiar circumstance occurred. The D. met the M. and starboarded her helm instead of porting it. She said the M. carried no lights: Held, that the burden of proving that the M. carried lights was upon her, and the affirmative evidence not being sufficient she was held alone to blame: (The Moderation, J. C. P. C. Dec. 12, 1863 (affirming judgment of Admiralty Court partly quoted); 1 Mar. Law Cas. 413; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 586.)

X. LIMITATION OF SHIPOWNER'S LIABILITY.

17. Construction of Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—Provisions then in force limiting shipowner's liability to value of ship and freight—British ship in collision with foreign ship within three miles of the United Kingdom.—Act held to give such limitation of liability to owners of the British ship: Cope v. Doherty, 4 Kay & J. 367, and other cases commented on by the court. Question as to reciprocity: (General Iron Screw Collier Company v. Schuurmann and others, V. Ch. C. July 20, 21, 22, and 30, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 60; 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 696; 1 J. & H. 181; 29 L. J. 877; 6 Jur. N. S. 883.)

18. Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—Damage to life or limb.—Sect. 504 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854 is to be read according to its literal meaning and for the purposes of satisfying claims for damage to life or limb, the real value of the vessel and freight is to be taken so long as it is not less than 15*l.* per ton. But this limitation does not apply to a claim for damage to goods. In such a case a decree was made in common form as in the African Company v. Swaney, 1 K. & J. 38. Interest to be decreed according to practice of Admiralty Court from date when freight was due if there was freight, or from time of collision if there was no freight: (Nixon v. Roberts, V. Ch. C. June 23 and July 2, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 105; 1 J. & H. 739; 36 L. J. 844.)

19. Foreign vessels.—Security for costs.—In a case of damage for collision on the high sea between an American and an English vessel. The Court of Admiralty, acting in accordance with Cope v. Doherty, 4 K. & J. 367, ordered the foreigner who claimed the benefit of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, limiting his liability, to give security for costs: (The Wild Ranger, A. C. March 18 and 27, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 206; 31 L. J. 206.)

20. Damage by collision on high sea between foreign and English vessels.—Binding nature of ancient law of unlimited liability on Admiralty Court where not modified by statute. The court could not, where the law of the Admiralty Court was modified by statute, give a foreign vessel the benefit of limited liability on the principle of reciprocity under the 504th section of the Merchant Shipping Act. Distinction as to pilotage Act: The General Iron Screw Collier Company v. Schuurmann, 1 J. & H. 180; Cope v. Doherty, 4 K. & J. 384; 2 De G. & J. 626; and the Carl Johann (an unreported case before Lord Stowell, here described), relied on by the court: (The Wild Ranger, A. C. Nov. 11 and 18, and Dec. 2, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 375; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 725; 9 Jur. N. S. 134; 32 L. J. 49; see No. 21 hereof.)

21. Collision between British and foreign ship out of British jurisdiction.—Owners of British ship held entitled under the 54th section of Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act to benefit of limitation of liability to the value of 8*l.* per ton of ship's tonnage. Owners of foreign ships will likewise be entitled to the same limitation. Decisions upon the 50th sect. of the Merchant Shipping Act, clearly applying to British ships: Cope v. Doherty, 4 K. & J. 381; 31 L. J. 173; General Iron Screw Company v. Schuurmann, 1 J. & H. 180; and the Wild Ranger, 1 Mar. Law Rep. 275 (The Amalia, J. C. P. C. July 27, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 359; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 805; 9 Jur. N. S. 1111; 32 L. J. 161, affirming judgment of Dr. Lushington.)

XI. MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

22. Rules of sea.—Steamer and sailing ship.—Scandalising mainsail.—Intention of one vessel baffled by tide in a river. A schooner having, in order to turn her head down the river Mersey scandalised her mainsail, "which is effected by lowering the peak and hauling the tack of the mainsail close up, to diminish the action of the after sails and let the head sails act with more power," the intended effect was hindered by the flood tide: Held, that a steamer was not in fault for keeping her course in the expectation that the intention of the other vessel would have been carried into effect: (The Ulster, J. C. P. C. July 16, 1862 (reversing judgment of A. C.), 1 Mar. Law Cas. 234; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 737.)

23. Lien.—Delay in arresting ship.—Reasonable diligence.—Lien in respect of damage enforced against a ship in fault for collision, though she was not arrested till three years after the action was entered, and in the interval the ship had been sold. What constitutes reasonable diligence in finding out the ship to be proceeded against considered. If the owner settles for the damage with his underwriters, they must be considered as his agents and bound to exercise the same diligence. Principle laid down in the case of The Bold Buccleugh, 7 Moo. P. C. C. 267, Notes of Cases, 243; (The Europa, A. C. April 16 and 21, and May 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 337; 8 L. T. Rep. N.S. 368; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 781; 32 L. J. 188.)

24. Sale of ship—Net proceeds—Marshal's fees—Interest.—Plaintiffs having obtained decree in collision case, and the ship having been sold, they were held entitled only to net proceeds of ship after deducting marshal's fees and cost of arrest, &c., and to interest on the net amount from the date of collision. Leycester v. Logan (4 K. & J. 725) considered to have reference only to the peculiar relief afforded by the 9th part of the Merchant Shipping Act 1854, and to similar cases under the subsequent Acts: (The Europa, A. C. Dec. 1 and 21, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 420.)

XII. PILOT ON BOARD.

25. Compulsory pilotage—Merchant Shipping Act—Order in Council, 16th July 1857—Construction of Statutes.—Owners of ship held liable for damage to another ship where the damage arose solely through the fault of a pilot not compulsorily employed. Steamer licensed to carry passengers, carrying one passenger on a voyage from London to Rotterdam, held, on the authority of Reg. v. Stanton, 8 E. & B. 445, to be exempt from compulsory pilotage in the river Thames, under the 353rd, 376th, and 379th sections of the Merchant Shipping Act, and the Order in Council, dated 16th July, 1857. In construing statutes it is an established rule that the Court of Admiralty shall act in conformity with the decisions of the courts of common law: (The Earl of Auckland, A. C. Jan 18, 1861; J. C. P. C. Dec. 10, 1861; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 27; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 558; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 177.)

26. Pilotage certificate—Void for misdescription.—A pilotage certificate granted to the master by the Board of Trade, containing a misdescription of the ownership of the vessel, considered by the judge of the Admiralty Court to be void: (The Earl of Auckland, A. C. Jan 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 27; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 786.)

27. Burden of proof—Merchant Shipping Act, sec. 388—Appeal.—According to the decision of the Privy Council in The Christiana, 8 Moo. 160, the burden of proof rests upon the party seeking to be exempt from damage caused by the sole fault of a pilot compulsorily employed under the 388th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, to show that an improper order was given by the pilot, and acted upon. Damage decreed for in the absence of conclusive evidence. As laid down in The North American, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 338, the court of appeal, "in order to reverse a judgment, must not merely doubt whether it is right, but be satisfied that it is wrong." (The Schwalbe, J. C. P. C. Feb. 13, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 42, affirming judgment of A. C.)

28. Foreign ship—Compulsory pilotage—Damage.—Owners of foreign ship held not liable for damage done solely by default of pilot compulsorily taken under provision of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 92. It is quite competent for Parliament to impose compulsory pilotage on foreign vessels within British waters. Such enactment is not a breach of international law. Held, that under the 128th section of the above Act a foreign ship which had anchored for some days previously to the collision in the river Mersey, was compelled to have a pilot on board: The Maria, 1 W. Rob. 106; (The Anapolis and Johanna Stoll, A. C., April 18, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 69; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 692.)

29. Compulsory pilotage—Pilotage certificate to master—Hull Pilot Act—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—It being pleaded that the owners of a ship were not liable for damage because the collision arose solely through the fault of a pilot compulsorily employed: Held, that the circumstance of a pilotage certificate having been granted to the master, unknown to and not at the time having been taken up by him, did not exempt the ship from compulsory pilotage: (Hull Pilot Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 105, s. 52; and Merchant Shipping Act, sects. 332, 340, 353, 387, and 388 referred to, The Kilnarney, A. C. Jan. 18 and 24, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 121; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 905; 30 L. J. 41.)

30. Pilot's liability for damage—Admiralty Court Act, ss. 7 and 37—Merchant Shipping Act, s. 373.—Application to the court, under the 7th and 37th sections of the Admiralty Court Act, to call upon pilot to make good damage to extent of 150l., refused, the pilot's liability being limited by the 373rd section of the Merchant Shipping Act to 100l. The 7th section held not to apply to this case: (The Urania, A. C., Dec. 3, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 156.)

31. Successive collisions—Gross neglect—Liability.—A collision occurred, for which the owners were held not responsible, by reason that it occurred through the fault of a pilot compulsorily employed. But they were held liable for damage by subsequent collision with a third vessel, the master and crew being guilty of gross neglect after the first collision took place. Cases in which it is the duty of the master and crew to interfere with the pilot: (The Annapolis and Golden Light, A. C., Nov. 19, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 183.)

32. Damage done by steamship to "dummies."—A steamship having come into collision with the river Thames, by no fault of the master or crew, it was held that the owners were not liable for damage, whether the collision was occasioned by the fault of the pilot or by inevitable accident: (The Castor, A. C., March 16, 1859; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 205; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 106.)

All claims against the company must be rendered to the liquidators, at the offices, Roff's Wharf, Woolwich, on or before Saturday, the 23rd Oct.

Lintz Colliery Company (Limited).—Liquidator, J. N. Brown, Esq., Anglesey Chambers, Birmingham.

Messrs. Fleming, Mallinson, and Co., machinists, of Manchester.—Their liabilities reach about 10,000l., and their assets 539l. A committee of investigation has been appointed.

Messrs. Gavin and McKerron, of Glasgow.—The liabilities are stated at 32,717l. and the assets at 18,170l. A composition of 10s. in the pound has been offered and accepted, subject to the approval of a committee.

Mr. D. R. Rodocanachi.—This gentleman has suspended payment with liabilities variously estimated at from 10,000l. to 30,000l.

THE BEVERLEY ELECTION COMMISSION.

At Beverley, Sir H. Edwards on Tuesday appeared in court with Mr. Serjeant Sleight and two other counsel. When the first witness was called, Mr. Serjeant Sleight objected to the jurisdiction of the court, as on the 27th Sept., the inquiry had been adjourned by two instead of by three commissioners. A very stormy scene ensued. All order in the court was for some time at an end. The Commissioners retired, and during their absence there was great excitement. The superintendent of police had been called upon by the Commissioners to remove Serjeant Sleight, but he declined to do so without an indemnity. The Commissioners declared a firm determination to maintain their authority, and Serjeant Sleight then said he had done his duty, and he would retire. The proceedings then went on as usual.

BOROUGH ELECTIONS.—The Parliamentary return, just issued, relating to the borough elections for England and Wales at the general election in 1868, is defective in regard to five boroughs—Birkenhead, Brecon, Carnarvon, Dudley, and Haverfordwest. With regard to the other 195 cities and boroughs of England and Wales returning members to Parliament, the return shows that in 32 towns there was no contest; in 163 there were contests, and 75 per cent. of the number of electors on the register voted—that is to say, three in every four. The numbers given as on the register now in force generally include duplicate qualifications, and therefore the proportion voting may have been rather higher than three-fourths. But an average is often compounded of widely diverse items. In some places the proportion voting at the last election was very much higher than three-fourths; the return states that at Ashton-under-Lyne the number voting was 4445 out of the 4822 on the register; at Bewdley 1036 out of 1043, the closest polling of all; at Blackburn, 9088 voted of the whole 9712; at Bridgewater, 1408 of the 1484; at Clitheroe, 1453 of the 1595; at Coventry, 7716 of the 7925; at Droitwich, 1393 of the 1532; at Durham, 1508 of the 1603; at Evesham, 649 of the 716; at Hertford, 789 of the 851; at Knaresborough, 709 of the 766; at Maidstone, 3123 of the 3214; at Northallerton, 758 of the 807; at Peterborough, 2249 of the 2461; at Petersfield, 684 of the 750; at Pontefract, 1902 of the 1910, very close polling indeed; at Preston, 10,459 of the 11,312; at Stockport, 5279 of the 5702; at Tamworth, 1624 of the 1748; at Taunton, 1809 of the 1977; at Warwick, 1545 of the 1688; at Westbury, 957 of the 1046; at Windsor, 1598 of the 1777; at Wycombe, 1201 of the 1338. Many of these are small places in which every vote is of value, and the residuum is sought out and brought to the poll. The polling is much less close in the great boroughs. At the general election of 1868, only 31,145 of the 42,880 on the register for Birmingham voted; at Bristol only 15,176 of the whole 21,153; at Leeds, 27,506 of the 37,510; at Liverpool, 32,080 of the 39,645; at Manchester, 37,156 of the 48,256; at Sheffield, 22,015 of the 29,955; in the city of London, 14,348 of the 20,185; at Westminster, 13,567 of the 18,879; in Southwark, 8588 of the 17,703; in the Tower Hamlets, 21,193 of the 32,546; at Hackney, 23,668 of the 40,613; in Finsbury, 19,973 of the 31,759; in Marylebone, 21,461 of the 35,575; in Chelsea, 11,804 of the 17,408; in Lambeth, 22,497 of the 33,377; at Greenwich, 10,838 of the 15,588. This enumeration shows also how greatly the borough constituencies differ in size. With the exception of Chelsea, Southwark, Westminster, and Greenwich, all the 16 boroughs just named have more than 20,000 electors on their register; there are 16 other boroughs with less than 800 electors in each. Dorchester has only 638, Marlborough 616, Calne 591; all three were uncontested. The most populous borough in England is Liverpool, which in the census in 1861 had 443,938 inhabitants, and there are 13 other English boroughs with more than 150,000 souls in each; the least populous borough is Lynton, which in 1861 had but 3215 inhabitants, and there are 14 other English boroughs with less than 6000 souls. The order of the House of Commons for the return from which these figures are taken, directed that it should distinguish between electors entitled to vote as householders under the Reform Act of 1837, and those entitled to vote as 10% occupiers; but many of the returning officers report that they are unable to supply the numbers separately, and those who profess to do so have in several instances made returns which are unsatisfactory on the face of them. Some distinguish the number on the register as lodgers, and this part of the return is of interest. The return for Marylebone states that there are 4019 lodgers on the register for that borough, a ninth of the whole constituency; for Hackney 969, not a fortieth part of the constituency; for the Tower Hamlets only 467; for Lambeth only 419; for Greenwich, 235. Among the returns for provincial boroughs that for Plymouth states that 324 of the electors on the register are lodgers, one of every 15 electors; the Brighton return states that there are 127 lodgers among the 8661 electors; Windsor reports 58 lodgers on the register; Portsmouth, 55; Manchester, only 28; Christchurch, 19; Canterbury and South Shields, 18 each; Coventry, 14; Chester and Harwich, 13 each; Durham, 12; Montgomery, 11; Lewes, Salisbury, and Scarborough, 9 each; Bridport, Bury St. Edmund's, and Poole, 5 each; Bolton and Great Marlow, 4 each; Andover, 3; Leicester and Malton, 1 each. The lodger has hardly yet made good his footing.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

BREWERS' COVENANTS—RESTRAINT ON TRADE.—The plaintiff, a brewer, conveyed land in fee to the trustees of a building society, who covenanted that the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, should have the exclusive right of supplying all ale, beer, and porter which might be consumed in every house or other building which might be erected on the land, and which should be opened or used as an inn, public-house, or beer-shop. The defendant, who was also a brewer, bought a piece of the land of the trustees, and thereon built and opened a public-house, which he supplied with beer of his own brewing. The plaintiff then filed this bill, alleging that the defendant had purchased the land with notice of the covenant, and stating that he had always been and still was ready to supply to the defendant beer of good quality at fair market prices, and he prayed that he might be restrained from supplying the house with beer from any other brewer than the plaintiff. To this bill the defendant demurred, but it was held (affirming the decision of Stuart, V. C.), that the covenant was not bad for uncertainty, or want of mutuality, or as being a restraint on trade, and the demurrer was overruled: (Cutt v. Tourle, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 188. Ch.)

APPOINTMENT—ALLEGED FRAUD ON POWER.—Where a father agreed to appoint a share of a fund to his daughter, and to secure by bond an equal amount to the trustees of her marriage settlement under which he was to have a contingent reversion in both funds: Held (in a suit to set aside the appointment), that as the transaction was intended substantially for the benefit of the daughter, and as the father gave a high value for the contingent interest, there was no fraud on the power: (Cooper v. Cooper, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 197. V. C. J.)

PRIVY COUNCIL—NOMINAL INTEREST.—In a suit in which damages only are claimed, the proof by the appellant of a nominal interest, which might be the subject of an action, with a mere nominal claim for damages, will be no ground for the Judicial Committee to reverse a judgment given in favour of the respondent in the court below: (Giraud v. Paterson, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 200. P. C.)

GUILDHALL POLICE COURT.

LAWYERS AND CLIENTS.

Nicholas Lake, surveyor, William Hey, and Stephen William Pugh, solicitor's clerk, were summoned for conspiring to defraud Mr. Isaac Lewis of a sum of money by false and fraudulent pretences.

F. Turner appeared for the complainant, and Cooper for the defendants.

Turner said that the three defendants were charged with conspiracy, and with having obtained a sum of money from the complainant by fraud and false pretences. In the early part of this year Mr. Lewis, who was a builder, had an action in a County Court, and the case in dispute was referred to one of the Masters of a Superior Court. To settle this action it was necessary to have a survey made, and he employed the defendant Lake to do it. He made out his bill at 25*l.*, but the Master taxed it down to 3*l.* 3*s.* Lake got an I O U from the complainant for 25*l.*, and on that he sued him in the City of London Court. By agreement a verdict was given for 15*l.* 15*s.* and costs on the lower scale. He paid the 15*l.* 15*s.* into court, and a day or two after he received a letter telling him to attend the court to tax their bill of costs. The bill amounted to over 20*l.*, but it was taxed down to 11*l.* 15*s.*, and he paid that into court. At the taxing, Mr. Johnston appeared for Mr. Lewis, the now complainant, and Mr. Hey and Mr. Pugh appeared for Mr. Lake. Both Lewis and Lake were also present, and the former was led to believe that Hey was Mr. Biggenden, an attorney, of Castle-street, Holborn, and that Pugh was his clerk. It was those costs that they were charged with receiving under false pretences. Every person had a right to bring or defend an action in the County Court in person; but if he did so the scale of costs was much less than when the case was conducted by an attorney. The consequence had been that, by falsely representing that Mr. Biggenden had been engaged as an attorney in this case, they had compelled the complainant to pay a much larger sum than he would otherwise have had to pay.

Cooper said it would save a very long examination if he were allowed to prove at once that Pugh was acting in the capacity of Biggenden's clerk, and that all that had been done had been done with Mr. Biggenden's knowledge and consent. He would put Mr. E. P. Wood into the box, who would prove that Mr. Biggenden had complained to him of the manner in which Pugh had treated him over the matter, and that he would prosecute him for embezzlement. Now, he could not prosecute him for embezzlement unless he was his servant.

Mr. Martin suggested that the best way would be to put Mr. Biggenden into the box first, and that might end the case.

Mr. John Pattenden Biggenden said that he was an attorney, practising in Castle-street, Holborn. Pugh was not his clerk, and had no authority to use his name in the case of Lake v. Lewis. A few weeks ago Pugh called on him about the case and offered him a guinea as his fee, and he refused it. That guinea was not for the use of his name as an attorney, but for his fee for having done nothing, for he had not been instructed as an attorney in the case. He did not know Lake, and had never seen him to his knowledge before that transaction.

He had no previous knowledge of Hey, and never authorised either him or Pugh to attend the Sheriffs' Court and tax the costs in the action in question.

Cooper severely cross-examined him with the view of showing that he had authorised Pugh to use his name and act as his clerk. At first he would not swear positively whether he had or had not, but after a great deal of pressure he swore positively that he had not, and although he made use of the word "embezzlement," he said it in a temper and without thought, for a moment's reflection would convince him that he could not prosecute a man for embezzlement who was not his servant.

After some discussion on the irregularity of the proceedings, the evidence of Mr. E. P. Wood, barrister, was taken for the defence, in order that he might go into the country on other business.

Mr. Wood stated that a brief in the case of Lake v. Lewis was put into his letter-box, endorsed with the name of Mr. Biggenden, as the attorney in the action, and before he saw the brief he was called on by Hey and Pugh, and received from them a cheque drawn by Mr. Lewis for 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* He had known Pugh by sight for some time, but did not know whose clerk he was, and he had before been engaged by Hey in an action in which they were successful. He therefore knew something of both of them, and thought when he saw the brief Pugh was Mr. Biggenden's clerk. The case was adjourned, and he afterwards had a refresher of 1*l.* 3*s.* 6*d.* One day he met Mr. Biggenden as he left his chambers, and he came to make inquiries as to the case of Lake v. Lewis. He said he understood that Pugh had made use of his name and he (witness) said "Yes;" he had. Biggenden said he had no business to do so, and that he understood they had drawn out all the money, and not paid him anything. He said he did not like that sort of thing; he was using his name without his authority, and he would prosecute him (Pugh) for embezzlement. Witness replied, "Well, if he has taken all your money, I should have some, or else I would take the course," meaning the legal course. He said if they would only do what was fair, and give him a reasonable proportion, he would be satisfied, or words to that effect. Before they parted he said to Mr. Biggenden, "Do you mean to say that Mr. Pugh has conducted a case for you in the Sheriffs' Court without seeing you, or saying anything to you about it?" and he replied, "No, I do not mean to say that. He called on me, and mentioned the case; but I did not expect he was going to do what he did in the matter without seeing me further upon it." They then parted.

The proceedings were then adjourned.

THE LONG VACATION.—To-day is the last day of the long vacation at common law, and Chancery has the privilege of extending its recess till the Friday following, the 29th inst.

It will be remembered that Mr. Justice Willes recently made an order in the case of Padwick v. The Duke of Newcastle that the Sheriff of Middlesex should withdraw from the mansion in Carlton House-terrace within a week. That officer has accordingly withdrawn, and the Chancery suit now pending before the Master of the Rolls will shortly decide the question as to whether the execution creditor has a right at present to make available the life interest in the family mansion in Carlton House-terrace.

NEW LAW IN THE DIVORCE COURT.—On the 2nd proximo (the first day of term) the following provision in the new Act on the Law of Evidence (32 & 33 Vict. c. 68) will practically take effect:—"The parties in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, shall be competent to give evidence in such proceedings, provided that no witness in any proceeding, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked, or bound to answer, any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery."

CHANCERY RETRENCHMENT.—Now that Lord Westbury makes his 5000*l.* a year so beneficial to his country by his judicial aid in the House of Lords and the Privy Council, why should not Mr. Gladstone and the Chancellor of the Exchequer take advantage of the vacancy in the Chancery Appeal Court to save 6000*l.* a year in another quarter? It is well known by practitioners in the Chancery courts that the powers of primary jurisdiction are in excess of the requirements of the public, and that the delay, small as it now is comparatively with times of old, is occasioned by the inadequacy of strength to the work required in the equity chambers; in fact, the equity courts in this country have become only compilers and extractors of bewildered account-books—a duty properly of those gentlemen who inhabit accountants' chambers. The actual equity business relating to property is now so small that the institution of Vice-Chancellors has, in truth, become unnecessary, and even with the other court cases there is a difficulty in distributing it so as to give even an apparent work in court to the four junior equity judges though their chambers are thronged with expectant and disappointed suitors. The points of law for argument and decision by the judges in court are so few in comparison with the inquiries by their clerks that despair often marks the countenance of the gentlemen learned in the law. It is obvious, then, that the proper course is to reduce the number of judges while increasing the staff of those who remain. This may effectually and economically be managed by taking from the Master of the Rolls the functions of a judge of primary instance, and making that officer for the time being senior judge of the Court of Appeal in Chancery as constituted by the Acts establishing that court, and then to distribute his three chief clerks with their subordinate staff between the three Vice-Chancellors, and thus the 6000*l.* a-year can be saved. A short Act could declare the Master of the Rolls for the time being to be Chief Judge of the Court of Appeal in Chancery; that his chief clerks, with their staff, should be assigned between the Vice-Chancellors as additional officers in chambers by a general order in Chancery; that the Lord Chancellor and Vice-Chancellors should, by general orders, distribute all primary jurisdiction matters between the Vice-Chancellors. No additional officers are required, and the salaries of the present holders are already subject to the Treasury; neither are new courts required, those now attached to the Rolls Court being confessedly the best in use, an arm chair for the junior judge of appeal being the only article of furniture with which the country need be charged. The Master of the Rolls would retain his jurisdiction, inclusive of that of Keeper of the Public Records, with its depositories and management, and would have increased time to devote to that greatly extending and valuable department. The duties of the Petty Bag, with the jurisdiction over solicitors, might still be retained, as well as the department for orders of course, for the Vice-Chancellors have already jurisdiction to overrule any erroneous orders made there in causes attached to their courts, and the present ease, rapidity, and cheapness with which a slip in a cause can be remedied there might still afford the assistance of which solicitors are glad to avail themselves, while their clerks could continue to learn practice from the learned gentleman who well exercises the powers of the office. The present chambers of the clerks form part of the Rolls estate, and might be advantageously used for the Public Record Office, the business of which is rapidly increasing, and until Parliament meets the Lord Chancellor and Lord Justice Giffard may together well transact the greater matters of the business of appeal, while the Act passed in consequence of the illness of Lord Justice Rolt will enable the Lord Justice alone to dispose of minor matters. When Lord Justice Selwyn ceased to sit there was no appeal remaining unheard, and the few which may since have been set down may surely be disposed of by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Justice Giffard, or can bear delay until Parliament can act, and therefore under all circumstances, why should not Mr. Gladstone and the Chancellor of the Exchequer save the country at least 6000*l.* a year.—Times.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

THE "EDMUNDS SCANDAL."

The Court of Arbitration appointed to inquire into all matters in dispute between Mr. Leonard Edmunds and the Crown met on Thursday morning in the Court of Common Pleas. The court consists of Mr. Manisty, Q.C. (umpire); arbitrators, Hon. G. Denman, Q.C., and Mr. C. Pollock, Q.C. Counsel for Mr. Edmunds: Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., Mr. Napier Higgins, Mr. Tindal Atkinson, and Mr. Haveland Burke. Counsel for the Crown: The Attorney-General, Mr. Field, Q.C., and Mr. Archibald.

The Attorney-General said the present proceedings arose mainly out of a Chancery suit that was instituted by the Crown against Mr. Edmunds, in which it was alleged that he was a debtor to the Crown in 10,000*l.*, and that should be proved. It was true that an action for libel was brought by Mr. Edmunds against Messrs. Greenwood and Hindmarsh, in consequence of their "Patent Office Inquiry Reports," which he alleged to be false and malicious. That action was commenced after the information in Chancery. By the information, certain accounts were to be taken before the chief clerk of the Vice-Chancellor, and this arbitration is substituted in lieu of that. The basis of the inquiry, he contended, rested upon how much, if any, Mr. Edmunds was indebted to the Crown. Then the question for the arbitrators would be whether there are equitable and moral considerations to relieve him of a portion of this sum, or all; but that would scarcely arise unless the Crown proved that Mr. Edmunds is a public debtor.

Mr. Digby Seymour contended that the larger portion of 10,000*l.* was due to Mr. Edmunds on account of discounts on stamps, and if he could affirmatively prove that, it would strike at the root of the 10,000*l.*, and show that Mr. Edmunds was clearly the plaintiff, and that the Crown had been dragged in against its will.

At the conclusion of the argument the arbitrators decided that the Crown should establish their case, if they could, against Mr. Edmunds, with respect to the account. The question of damages arising out of Mr. Greenwood's report on the patent-office, alleged by Mr. Edmunds to be malicious, would be another point to inquire into.

The Attorney-General stated that Mr. Edmunds was appointed to the office of Clerk of the Patents shortly after the passing of the Act 2 & 3 Will. 4, which did away with certain sinecure offices. Previous to 25th Aug. 1833, the Clerk of the Patents was paid by fees; but after that time he was paid by a salary of 400*l.* a year, and he was bound to pay over his receipts every three months, but no auditor was appointed. The salary originally by fees amounted to some 1200*l.* It appears from Mr. Edmunds' affidavit that when he undertook the office he was to allow 300*l.* out of his salary to the "Brougham family," for the support of the widow and family of the late Mr. John Brougham.

Mr. Albert William Woods, Lancaster Herald, Registrar, &c., has, we understand, received the appointment of Garter King at Arms.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. James Moncrieff, Her Majesty Advocate for Scotland, to be Her Majesty's Justice Clerk and President of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland, and also one of the Senators of the College of Justice there.

The Queen has been pleased to grant the office of Her Majesty's Advocate for Scotland to George Young, Esq., Her Majesty's Solicitor-General for Scotland, in the room of the Right Hon. James Moncrieff, appointed Her Majesty's Justice Clerk and President of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland.

The Queen has also been pleased to grant the office of Solicitor-General for Scotland to Andrew Rutherford Clark, Esq., advocate (now sheriff of Haddington and Berwick).

THE OPPOSITION TO THE BEVERLEY COMMISSIONERS.—On Thursday the commissioners removed from the Town-hall to the East Riding session-house. This appears to have been because the superintendent of the borough police refused to remove Mr. Serjeant Sleight from court on Monday. This morning two men refused to be sworn. They were ordered to be taken into custody until the rising of the court.

THE NEW LORD JUSTICE-CLERK.—On Tuesday, in the Court of Sessions, Edinburgh, Mr. Moncrieff presented his commission as Lord Justice Clerk to a full bench of judges. After going through the usual probationary trials he took the oath and his seat as President of the second division. The new Lord Advocate and Solicitor-General also presented their commissions. Mr. Moncrieff takes the title of Lord Moncrieff.

DEATH OF THE IRISH MASTER OF THE ROLLS.—We learn by telegram from Dublin that the Right Hon. John Edward Walsh, Master of the Rolls of Ireland, died in Paris on Tuesday. The right hon. gentleman had just returned from Italy, where he had made a tour with his family, when he was attacked with diarrhoea. He was in the 53rd year of his age, having been born in Nov. 1816, and was the son of the late Rev. Dr. Walsh, Vicar of Finglass, county Dublin. He was called to the Bar in Ireland in 1839; and in 1841 he married Blair Belinda, daughter of the late Gordon MacNeill, Esq. He obtained a silk gown in 1857, and became Attorney-General for Ireland in 1866. In the same year he was elected M.P. for the University of Dublin, on the retirement of the Right Hon. James Whiteside, who was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. Having represented the University for a short time, the right hon. gentleman was elevated to the dignity of Master of the Rolls, as successor to the Right Hon. B. C. Smith, whose name will be remembered by legal students in connection with the history of Daniel O'Connell. The deceased gentleman was author of several works, of which, perhaps, the most remarkable was that entitled "Ireland Sixty Years Ago," which was published in 1847.

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET POLICE COURT.

Wednesday, Oct. 20.

(Before Mr. TYRWHITT.)

The Refreshment Houses Act. The Haymarket night-houses.

Inspector Tierney and police-sergeant Mackenzie, both of the C division, charged with violation of duty at the house of Mrs. Rose Burton, refreshment house keeper, Jermyn-street, appeared before Mr. Tyrwhitt for his decision.

Froggatt was for the prosecution.

Edward Lewis for the defence.

Mr. TYRWHITT said:—Rose Burton, the complainant, keeps a refreshment house, No. 4, Jermyn-street. On the morning in question, for all that appears, the house was closed at one o'clock, the proper time, in the absence of the complainant, who returned home about two in the morning from some party in the neighbourhood. A gentleman, who was too late for conveyance to Dulwich, slept on the third floor. The other persons in the house at this time were a female servant, who, with a little boy, was asleep in bed on the third floor; the complainant, in her bath or dressing-room, on the second floor; and a waiter and barmaid, who lived elsewhere and left the house after that visit of the police which was the subject of this summons. The complainant was undressing in the bath-room when the defendant Tierney, after searching the coal cellar, and entering the maid servant's room on the third floor, knocked at the complainant's dressing-room door, demanding admittance. She showed herself with part of her dress removed, and shut the door in his face. The defendant continued to demand admission, and she to refuse it, saying she was not a prostitute. The defendant remained on the stairs by her room until half past six in the morning. Her bedroom door, next adjoining the dressing-room, was open all night. Inspector Tierney insisted that some one was in the room with her, and the other defendant, Mackenzie, swore that he heard more voices than one in it. At half-past six the defendants left, putting a constable to watch the house. No more is reported. See the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 27, s. 18, provides that "it shall be lawful for all constables and officers of police when and as often as they shall respectively think proper, to enter into all houses licensed as refreshment houses, and into and upon the premises belonging thereto"—very large and comprehensive words, and if pushed to the extent they may by some be held to bear, not only might every room and part of the premises be searched at every hour of the twenty-four, though tenanted at the time by the regular inmates, being women in or going to bed, but a constable might be posted and remain in every room or other part of the premises all day and night without an iota of evidence of facts to warrant such conduct. It seems to me that the Act justifies no such domiciliary visit as that here proved. It cannot be taken as law that because a policeman chooses or affects to believe without any present evidence of fact that at half-past two in the morning some one, male or female, is in the dressing-room of a female keeper of a refreshment-house when she is undressing for bed, he can demand admittance to that room, and, if refused, he can blockade her there for several hours. Nothing is intimated to the casual guest who slept on the third floor; but the defendant Mackenzie, when called for the defendant Tierney, swore in chief that he heard more than one voice in the dressing-room during the night. He was an eager listener, with a strong desire to hear what I am of opinion could not have been heard. At all events, on cross-examination by Mr. Williams, he said he heard no voice during four hours and a half. But supposing a second person to have been with complainant in the dressing-room, of which there is no evidence other than the above, and even assuming that other person to have been a man, what difference would it make in any summons for refusing to admit the police? That was their real course, whatever its probable fate would be on these facts. As to the credit to be given to the witnesses, the sergeant of police, Mackenzie, who is also a defendant, and was called for his inspector Tierney, has just as much interest in making out a defence for himself and the inspector as the complainant has in proving her case. Now, if there was no disposition to harass the complainant needlessly, why was not the constable, who was posted outside the house at half-past six in the morning, posted there at half-past two, when the complainant refused the police admittance to her dressing-room? The police, no doubt, were right in watching the house, but no judicious officer can indorse vexatious conduct by the police where, as in this case, a distinct course is provided by the very same section of the Act, which they seek to enforce, viz., that of summoning the complainant for refusing to admit them to some part of the licensed premises. I hold the defendants to have been, therefore, guilty of violation of duty. I now come to the measure of penalty to be awarded. The police (defendants) are said to be men of good characters, whereas the complainant had been repeatedly summoned for alleged breaches of the law in her house. One conviction of her by my colleague for harbouring prostitutes was, however, quashed by the quarter sessions, and another by myself for a like offence stands appealed against at this time. Its fate is, however, immaterial to my present decision. Now, if I set off the undoubted notoriety of this house as kept by complainant against the excess which appears to me to have been committed by the defendants, it would diminish the penalty of 10l. they have incurred. I, therefore, fine Inspector Tierney 2l. and 2s. costs, and the summons against Mackenzie should be withdrawn, as he acted under Tierney's orders; but, if not withdrawn, I shall fine him 20s. and 2s. costs.

Froggatt said he would at once withdraw the summons against Mackenzie, as there was no desire to do more than to decide a great public question.

E. Lewis hoped the fines would not be demanded at once, as he should most likely be instructed to ask for a special case.

Mr. TYNW HITE said the fines must be paid within fourteen days, and if a special case was required, there must be no delay about it.

E. Lewis said he would ask for a special case on several points of law.

Froggatt said the name of Gaffin had been mentioned at the last examination, he wished to state that the person referred to was not Mr. Gaffin, the well-known sculptor of Regent-street.

The Daily News states that an organisation is being formed, under the title of the "Metropolitan Police Vigilance Association," to devise some means for ensuring a general supervision of the conduct of the police in the streets, so that all acts of unnecessary violence on their part could be promptly established by well-authenticated evidence before the magistrates. The members of the association, it is suggested, should be "watchful at all times in the streets, especially at night, ready to acquiesce themselves with the facts of any police outrage, and willing to come forward and have them proved."

NEW LANCASTER MAGISTRATE.—At the Lancaster Quarter Sessions, the following gentlemen took the oaths and qualified as magistrates for this county: Messrs. E. M. Foxwick, Cloughton; Joseph Francis Leese, Preston; George Theophilus Robert Preston, Liverpool and Elia; H. W. Schneider, Windermer; Jas. Wrigley, Bury; Nathaniel Cane, Kirby Ireth; Edward Macklow, Bury; and James Stephen Young, Carnal.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

The official liquidators to the Albert Life Insurance Company appointed by Vice-Chancellor James, are Mr. Young and Mr. Price. The objections to whom he thought were "most unreasonable."

THE ADVANTAGES OF LIFE ASSURANCE.—Volunteers might be written upon the benefits which result from life assurance, but we question whether a more striking illustration of its value could be afforded than has recently come under our notice in the case of a right reverend prelate just deceased. In 1821 the bishop insured his life in the Rock Office for 5000l. In 1826 a bonus was added to his policy of 200l.; in 1833 a second bonus of 715l.; in 1840 a third of 675l.; and in 1847 a sum of 833l. was added. This brought up the total additions in the way of bonus to 2423l. in twenty-six years, or at the rate of nearly 100l. a year. For this accumulated bonus of 2423l. the bishop received in 1851 a net payment of 1816l. An arrangement was made with the office at the same time, by which all future payments of premiums on his part should cease, and he commuted these sums for a payment of 1865l., thus realizing a net sum of 751l. and freedom from all further payments. In the year 1856 the bonus added to the policy was 1665l.; in 1861 it was 1137l.; and in 1868 a sum of 1341l., making a total addition since 1851 of 3645l. or including the bonus purchased in 1851, of not less than 5998l. On his death, which occurred a few weeks since, his representatives are entitled to receive from the Rock a sum of 8945l. At a time when public confidence has been so rudely shaken in the stability of life offices, it is well that facts such as these should be known, for they prove in the most convincing manner the advantages which may be obtained alike to the assured and to the shareholders in well-conducted corporations from the business of life assurance.—Railway News.

COUNTY COURTS.

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Wednesday, Oct. 20.

NOVEL POINT UNDER THE COUNTY COURT ACT.

An application was made to Master Johnson for a new trial in the County Court under peculiar circumstances. An action was brought in the Exchequer and referred to chambers to a County Court. When appointed to be heard in the County Court the plaintiff was not prepared, and was nonsuited. Now his attorney applied for a new trial, which the defendant opposed on the ground that the County Court judge had directed a nonsuit. On the other side it was argued that as the trial was ordered at chambers, the same power could now be exercised at chambers to direct a new trial.

Master JOHNSON declined to grant the application. It was, in his opinion, an application for the court to deal with. He had no power to order a new trial, but the plaintiff might appeal to a judge at chambers or go to the court.

The application was accordingly refused.

(Before T. FALCONER, Esq., Judge.)

JONES v. PRICE AND PRICE.

Sale of produce of a farm without any stipulation that it shall be consumed on the farm. The purchaser cannot set-up any customary right to consume the produce on the farm.

Games appeared for the plaintiff; and Bishop for the defendants.

His HONOUR said:—This action is brought to recover 6l. 11s. 9d., as damages sustained in refusing to allow certain head of cattle to consume the plaintiff's straw on Boleamen Farm, and for breaking two locks. It appeared that one David Williams was tenant of Boleamen Farm until 20th Sept. 1868. At his sale in October, certain straw was sold to David Davies, who went for a short time into possession of the farm. David Davies re-sold the straw to William Price, and left the farm—the straw being produce of the farm, before Davies came in. William Price, who was agent for the owner of the land, agreed, it is said, that John Jones, the plaintiff, should take the farm, and said the straw to him for 2l. 5s. David Davies, one of the defendants, afterwards became tenant in possession. John Jones, the plaintiff, did not become tenant of the farm,—he paid no rent, and no customary rights of tenancy ever belonged to him derivable from a tenancy; by himself had no customary rights, and his vendor had none. Before the defendant came into possession, the plaintiff put upon the land to consume the straw two cows of his own; he took in three animals of James Williams, four of one Jones, and three of Thomas Davies. When, however, the defendant David Price came into possession, he drove the animals off the land. The plaintiff asked why he so openly broke the custom of the country, and he, David Price, "refused him," unless he should pay for the use of the buildings. This was about the 17th March, and the purchase of the straw had been made on the 6th Feb. The plaintiff desired to remain until the 1st May. David Davies says he was present when the straw was first put up for sale, and that nothing more was said than that it was put up for sale. He says he only sold the straw, and he had no rights to sell but the straw. As William Price, however, was agent for the management of the property, it is contended that, through his sale to Jones, he (Jones) obtained a customary right to the privileges of an outgoing tenant. He was never tenant. Whatever right he had did not arise out of the contract of tenancy. He had only, before David Price came in, a mere licence to use the premises, at the utmost (if, indeed, he had this by the authority of the landlord), and the absence of an express agreement, binding on the landlord, it was a revocable licence. There was no person as tenant (the former setting up a customary right) who could claim possession of any part of the farm against the new tenant; and the fact that his claim to occupy is made as springing from an alleged custom, conclusively shows the absence of an express agreement. If there had been an irrevocable agreement with the plaintiff Jones to occupy, there would have been some sort of tenancy; but there was no tenancy. David Price says, "they (the plaintiffs) wished him to give them the custom, and he was willing if they gave him an acknowledgment for the use of the building." He also says, "there is about a head of straw remaining." There appears to me to be no cause of action against the defendants. There can be no customary right in mere purchasers of straw giving interests in the possession of a farm on which it was grown. All the produce of a farm is saleable, and may be consumed anywhere when there is no express contract controlling the consumption. It would be an unreasonable custom if it were claimed, and especially when the vendor himself has no interest in the land through his own occupation. Any such right must be the result of express agreement with the landlord or with his agent authorised to let the land. The plaintiff was not precluded from taking away whatever straw may have belonged to him, and his vendor was not precluded from removing it. In this case it was not the simple possession of the straw which has been contended for, but rights of the farm itself, which have been asserted by parties who never were tenants of the land. Therefore, I give judgment for the defendants.

WELSHPOOL COUNTY COURT.

Thursday, Oct. 14.

(Before J. SMITH, Esq., Q.C.)

DAVIES v. DYSON.

Remitted action—County Court costs—Power of judge.

A County Court judge has no power over the cost in an action remitted after issue joined.

The following relates to this case, which was heard at the August Court.

Wilding then appeared for plaintiff, and Clarke for defendants.

In this case, which was an action brought in the Court of Queen's Bench, but tried at the Welsh pool August Court by a judge's order, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 29l. 6s. 3d. the full amount of his claim, which was for the value of a lot of wool sold by him to the defendant. Upon the delivery of the verdict the Judge said he should disallow the plaintiff's costs but being reminded the parties that the action was brought in one of the Superior Courts and merely referred for trial to the County Court, and that consequently his Honour had no more control over the costs than a judge at the assizes would have, he limited his disallowance to the County Court fees, over which he considered he had control, and the registrar's certificate was given accordingly. The question, however, of the power of a County Court judge to make this exceptional order has since been brought before the Taring Master of the Court of Queen's Bench, who decided that no such power exists, and refused to recognise the validity of the registrar's certificate, in respect of the disallowance of court fees. This decision is an important one, as it goes to show that, whatever may be the power of a County Court judge in respect of costs in an action commenced in one of the Superior Courts, but transferred to the County Court upon the application of a defendant, within a certain time after the writ is issued; he has none when, as in this case, issue is joined in the action, and it is then remitted to the County Court for trial, and a verdict is given for a sum which carries costs—or, in other words, that a County Court judge is, for that particular purpose, a judicial officer of the Supreme Court; and as regards costs, must be guided by the rules of that court, and not by those of his own.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Thursday, Oct. 14.

(Before Mr. Deputy-Commissioner YATE LEE.)

Re "A TRADER-DEBTOR SUMMONS."

A "trader debtor summons" is a summary process available to a creditor for the purpose of bringing his debtor before the court, to show cause why he should not give security for payment of a debt claimed pending any action brought or to be brought for its recovery. If the debtor make an admission of the debt, he is liable to be adjudicated bankrupt on the eighth day afterwards, unless he satisfy the creditor; but if he make a deposition that he has a good defence to the action brought or to be brought for the amount claimed, the court proceeds to consider the probability of the success of the action, and the question of the solvency of the debtor, and if satisfied there is a bona fide claim, and that the debtor's solvency is doubtful, it has power and ought to require security from him, which, if not given within a limited time, subjects him to be made bankrupt. As this is a process which has been, to the great advantage of creditors, extensively resorted to under the present bankruptcy system, and, with some modifications, is embodied in the new Bankruptcy Act, we give publicity—anonously, as these matters are considered private—to the following report of one of these summonses; and we may observe that this case differs little from the ordinary discussions and difficulties which are raised where the debtor happens to employ an astute and contentious lawyer. On the appearance of the parties the debtor's solicitor took exception to the want of compliance on the part of the creditor with the rules and orders in respect to the affidavit of debt. In that document the creditor had omitted the word "is" before the words "justly and truly indebted," and therefore it read thus: "J. T. maketh oath and saith that A. S.—justly and truly indebted, &c." There was another omission in the affidavit of a like character, and the two combined were, according to the contention of the debtor's solicitor, sufficient to invalidate the proceedings. The court, after being obliged to hear long arguments from the respective advocates, overruled the objections, and held that as the informalities referred to appeared to have arisen from a mere slip, and were not matters of substance, they might, under rule 80, be rectified. The debtor's solicitor protested against this decision as being at variance with the ruling of the court in previous cases, and, in giving notice of appeal, asked that the further hearing of the summons might be postponed. He argued that it was the privilege of every suitor to appeal against the adverse decision of an inferior court, and that pending such appeal his client ought not to be prejudiced by being compelled to give security for his debt. His Honour said that it was the undoubted prerogative of the suitor to appeal, but the question of suspending the further proceedings on the summons was a matter for the discretion of the court. Technical objections were relics of the past, and very properly had ceased to be regarded by the courts with favour unless shown to be calculated to mislead or prejudicially affect any party. Here there was no such suggestion, and therefore he must decline to suspend the proceedings but require the debtor to proceed to the merits of the case. The debtor's solicitor thereupon claimed that as the court had so ruled the affidavit should be first rectified, and the affidavit was thereupon amended and resworn by the creditor. Objection was then taken by the solicitor to the summons on the ground that the affidavit upon which it was issued had been altered and resworn, and thereby had become virtually a new affidavit. The date of the affidavit became the date it was resworn, and therefore any summons issued prior thereto was minus the foundation upon which it should be grounded, namely, the affidavit of debt. His Honour held the affidavit, although amended, to be substantially the same as that on which the summons issued, and, therefore, the objection failed. The solicitor then took objection to the affidavit on account of the deponent not being himself the creditor, but only the secretary of the company which claimed to be creditors. He argued that the affidavit could alone be made by the creditor, and that a third person could not swear to a debt due to some other party. His Honour overruled the objection, and decided that the deposition of the agent of the company was sufficient to support the summons. The solicitor again gave notice of appeal, but the court refused to suspend the proceedings, and called upon the debtor either to admit or deny the debt. Objection to that course was then raised on the ground that if the debt were admitted it would prejudice the debtor on any appeal on the technical points; and further, that the debtor having given a bill of exchange for the amount claimed, was not in a position to admit that he was indebted to the claimant, as the latter might have discounted the bill. His Honour, notwithstanding those objections, insisted upon the debtor either admitting or denying the debt, whereupon his solicitor claimed to examine the creditor for the purpose of showing that the bill of exchange had been discounted. The court refused to allow the creditor to be examined, and ruled that as the affidavit of debt was prima facie valid, it rested with the debtor when the question of security came to be considered to show that the claimant had no ground of action.

CHANCERY COMMISSIONERS AND STATUTORY DECLARATIONS.—Can you or any of your correspondents inform me on what authority Chancery Commissioners monopolise the taking of statutory declarations and their attendant fees. Is it the result of some popular delusion that common law commissioners cannot take declarations? or has there been any statutory enactment since the Act of 1835 for the abolition of unnecessary oaths by which declarations have to be taken before Chancery Commissioners? As I read the 1835 Act, there is nothing whatever to prevent a common law commissioner from taking declarations. The 18th section of that Act provides, "That it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace, notary public, or other officer now by law authorised to administer an oath to take and receive the declaration, &c." Surely this is clear enough.

INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—If "Intermediate" will refer to page 423, of the 8th edition of Williams on Real Property, he will see that the author there notices the Act of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, which passed shortly before that edition was published, and which he omitted to mention in the earlier part (p. 160) of his work, where (probably by an oversight) he states the law as it was before the Act passed. Of course, in the case in point, the heir would inherit the lands, and they would be charged with the payment of the purchase-money.

Queries.

109. WILL.—POWER OF SALE.—CONVEYANCING.—A. by will devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate and effects unto three trustees, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to pay the rents and profits thereof, to, or permit the same to be received by, his wife during her life, with divers remainders over. The will contains a declaration, that the trustees, or trustee for the time being, might during the life of testator's wife, with her consent in writing, sell, and absolutely dispose of all, or any part of his said real estate, by public auction, or private contract, &c. (being the usual power of sale), but does not contain any express power for the trustees to revoke and reappoint. Testator's widow is still living. The trustees have with her consent, sold a portion of the testator's real estate. The question arises: What is to be the form of purchaser's conveyance? Are the trustees, with consent of testator's wife, to "grant and convey," or simply "appoint," or "revoke" and "reappoint"? And if to appoint, would it be advisable to add a "grant" also? Would the subsisting uses (or trusts) of the will be effectually revoked by a "grant" merely, or would it require a new appointment, to effect such revocation. Your correspondents are referred to Pridaoux's Conveyancing, vol. 1, p. 38; also Bythwood's Conveyancing, 3rd edit., vol. 9, p. 234 and 239; Wharton's Conveyancing, p. 484. P. P.

110. COUNTY COURT.—RENEWED ACTION.—Can anyone of your readers inform me if a plaintiff in an action of tort can under any, and what, Act or authority obtain the removal of an action from the Superior Courts, to a County Court. J. C. B.

111. UNSTAMPED GUARANTY.—AMOUNT OF PENALTY.—It being necessary to sue upon the following unstamped guaranty, the question arises whether for the purposes of stamp duty the subject-matter is 20*l.* or under, and consequently will the penalty on stamping it be 10*l.* or 1*l.*? "To P. Q. Sir,—In consideration of your having agreed to advance to Mr. W. K. and S. J., his wife, a loan of money upon the policy of insurance to be effected upon the life of the said S. J. with the Legal and General Life Assurance Company (by way of collateral security) in the sum of 200*l.*, at the annual premium of 5*l.* 4*s.* We, and each of us, undertake to guarantee the payment of the said premium every year during the continuance of Mr. P. Q.'s security on the said policy in the event of such premiums not being paid by the said W. K. or S. J., his wife, within five days from the time when such premiums respectively shall become due and payable, and to reimburse the said P. Q. such premiums when paid by him through the said W. K. and S. J., his wife's default. Dated 24th June, 1867." Signed and witnessed. On taking the document to Somerset House it was adjudged in a very off-hand manner to be liable to a 10*l.* penalty, on the ground that the subject-matter may amount to 20*l.* Will any of your readers favour me with an opinion as to the correctness of this ruling? W. H. W.

112. GAZETTE.—Where can the regulations of the London Gazette Office be found? WORRIED.

113. ADOPTION OF CHILD.—A. agreed, in consideration of a sum of money, to dispose of his child of two years of age to B., who wished to adopt it. After B. had had the child some time, A. demanded it back again. Query—Can B. legally detain the child? RICARDUS.

Answers.

(Q. 97.) COPYHOLDS.—ADMISSION OF MORTGAGES.—FINES.—STAMP DUTY.—Allow me to thank your correspondent, "J. Bell," for the very explicit answer to this question; and the opinion of himself or any other of your correspondents would oblige on the following points. 1. Whether in the case, as stated, the ad valorem stamp duty to be impressed on the assignment would not be that of a transfer of mortgage, pursuant to sect. 17 of 28 & 29 Vict. c. 96, the wife not taking anything for interest, fines, or costs? 2. Whether, as against the remainderman (the trustees consenting), the wife would be justified in deducting the fines, costs, &c., that she has had to pay, out of moneys that are in her hands, and which, in certain events happening, she would have to pay to the trustees for the benefit of the remainderman. W. H.

(Q. 104.) CONVEYANCE.—COVERTURE.—In my answer to the query of "W. W." there is an omission in my MS. After the words, "overruled by Taylor v. Meads," should follow, "If the conveyance was to her, her heirs, and assigns, or to her separate use, without the intervention of a trustee, it seems the deed disposing of the estate must be acknowledged by her: (Moore v. Morris; Harris v. Mott, supra)." There are also some misprints in this answer, and also in that to "P. O. T." (Q. 101), which, however, will be obvious to your readers. J. BELL.

(Q. 105.) FEW RENTS.—INCOMING VICAR.—Prima facie the churchwardens were not bound to pay over the rents paid in advance until the end of the six months, unless the stipend of the vicar was due at an earlier period; and a payment by the churchwardens of the stipend before it had accrued due, was a payment by them in their own wrong: (Lloyd v. Burroughs, 19 L. T. Rep. N. S. 696; L. Rep. 4 Ex. 63.) Prima facie, therefore, a new vicar coming in within the six months would be entitled to an apportionment. Z. Y.

(Q. 106.) DEED OF ASSIGNMENT.—REAL ESTATE.—The creditors are not barred, the case being one of express trust within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 24, s. 25. Z. Y.

(Q. 107.) ENROLMENT OF CHAPEL DEED.—The deed of enfranchisement must be enrolled. In Ashton v. Jones, the entail and absolute interest was already in Mortmain. Here, the seigniorial fee, the conveyance of which extinguished the copyhold tenure, was not previously in Mortmain. Z. Y.

— If W. W. C. will refer to stat. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 44, he will find that the deed may at any time be enrolled in Chancery, if thought fit. W. N. L.

— I am disposed to agree with those who differ with W. W. C., and think that a deed enfranchising copyhold lands requires to be enrolled under 9 Geo. 2, c. 36, although the land enfranchised is already in Mortmain under a deed enrolled pursuant to that statute. The well known case of Ashton v. Jones, 25 J. P. 36; 3 L. T. Rep. N. S. 47, certainly goes to show, broadly, that deeds, dealing with land already in Mortmain, do not require enrolment, and still I think that case means no more than this, "if, after enrolment of a deed conveying land in Mortmain, you wish to deal with the whole interest in such land, you need not enrol the deed affecting such dealing," for the Master of the Rolls said: "The meaning and spirit of the statute is to distinguish what lands are in Mortmain. When the whole of the interest in land is given for a charitable purpose by a deed, which is duly enrolled, the provisions of the statute are satisfied, and it is not required that the deed affecting the subsequent dealings with the property should also be enrolled." The proposed enfranchisement deed will not (except so far as a reference in it to the enrolment of the trustee may do so) distinguish what property is put in Mortmain by it. The enrolled trust-deed did not deal with the whole interest in the land comprised in it, but only with the interest of the vendor, or surrenderor (according to the mode and form in which the conveyance was made to the trustees); it did not deal with or affect the seigniorial rights of the lord (as fines, wards, ships, escheats, forfeitures, &c.), which are independent inheritable rights, arising out of land held by copy of court roll. The enfranchisement deed will be a release of those independent inheritable rights, so that the same may be merged or swallowed up in the freehold and inheritance of the land enfranchised; or it will be a conveyance by the lord to the tenants (the trustees) of the fee simple in the freehold of the particular and specific premises which were held by court copy, and in either case a "changing of the tenure from base to free." The proposed enfranchisement deed will not be a subsequent dealing with property in Mortmain, but an original grant or release of property not before reached or affected by deed enrolled. Wharton in his book on Conveyancing (p. 320, et seq.) gives the form of "a deed of enfranchisement of a piece of copyhold land by a corporation for the purpose of building a national school," and in his text says, "The mayor should after executing it acknowledge it on behalf of the corporation, before a master extra, and the deed should then be enrolled in Chancery, although the land may be already in Mortmain; but entry on the court rolls of the manor is unnecessary." If it should be decided not to enrol the enfranchisement-deed, I think care should be taken to recite in it fully the trust-deed, giving the date and other particulars of its enrolment. The following statutes may be referred to see if there is anything in them affecting the question:—9 Geo. 4, c. 85; 24 Vict. c. 9; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 44; none of which I have at hand. J. BELL.

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE CONGRESS.

HEALTH SECTION.

LEGISLATION FOR DRUNKARDS.

The business of this section was commenced by Dr. Symonds reading a valuable paper on "What legislative measures might be proposed to deal with cases of uncontrollable drunkenness." He said the subject was a very difficult one for those who did not admit, as many legal authorities did not, the existence of moral or emotional derangement; but was it not incumbent on the Legislature and Government of a civilised community to provide the means of restraining or protecting persons who, by the habitual indulgence in alcoholic drinks, put themselves into the category of insanity? Having enumerated many of the ill effects arising from vicious indulgence in liquor, the writer said when they contemplated those cases, had they not reason to blush with reproach that up to this period of the nineteenth century, with all its intellectual and moral culture, and its singularly advanced philanthropy, their laws had done nothing effectually to guard society, families, helpless women and children, and the wretched offenders themselves, against habits so odious and despicable by any adequate restraint or "determined penalties?"

Dr. Beddoe next read a paper communicated by Professor Gaidner, of Glasgow, on the same subject, in which he said they ought to encourage respectable while they discouraged disreputable public-houses; and the publicans themselves had been amongst the warmest supporters of any movement for discountenancing disreputable houses.

Dr. Pearce (London) opened a discussion on the papers, and he said, unless they should have private asylums for the care of dipsomaniacs he would contend either for separate public institutions or annexes to existing institutions. The question was, whether they should take the drunkard away from the temptation, or the temptation from the drunkard, and he advocated both, though he did not go the length of advocating a Maine liquor law. What he wanted was public houses to be limited in number, and liquor licences to be taken from music halls.

Professor Newman said they must first put down drink shops, for the fault of much of their legislation was that they frequently dealt with results and overlooked causes. If the liquor traffic was abolished, in a very short time the public revenue would abound so much that they might pay off the National Debt and build whatever hospitals were necessary.

After remarks by Dr. Stallard on an amendment in the drinkings of Sweden,

Dr. Lankester (coroner for Middlesex) said that it was a mistake to suppose that drunkenness was on the increase, though the evil was a great one. In 1858 there were 712 cases of death, and in 1867 there were 743; and in those ten years the population had increased to a much greater degree. He thought it was a thing to be stopped, that drunken persons should be supplied with more liquor by publicans and their barmaids; and he considered that drunkenness ought to be more stringently punished than at present. He wondered the teetotallers did not open attractive places of amusement to compete with the liquor sellers, and have something better than the filthy coffee shops.

ECONOMY AND TRADE.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE POOR LAW.

In this department, which is under the presidency of the Right Hon. Stephen Cave, M.P., the special question for discussion was, "In what respects may the Administration of the Poor Law be Improved." On this subject several papers were read. That by Mr. Elisha Robinson specially referred to the inequality with which the labour test is enforced, those places where the practice is carried out being the exception rather than the rule. Great stress was laid upon the beneficial effects of work, not so much on account of the direct profit to the union, but for the good which it does the pauper himself by teaching him to be self-reliant. Mr. Robinson would carry this principle to its extreme length, and, rather than neglect the application of the "labour test," would insist on what is called "shot drill," or the removing of stones from one place to another and then taking them back again, as the condition of relief to the able-bodied, where productive labour was not to be had. There is the habitual pauper, as well as the habitual criminal, and experience shows that this class has never been dealt with either in the letter or the spirit of the Poor Law Amendment Act 1834 and subsequent Acts. The aged, sick, feeble and imbecile ought to be dealt with more generously than has been the custom. The rearing of children in the workhouse was condemned by the author, who recommended that the boarding-out system, in vogue in Scotland, should be adopted. The poor law, he said, ought to enable guardians to effect a separation of the "able" from the feeble in the unions. This separation might be effected by sending the "able" to the workhouse, which should be placed close to the centre of population in the union, that no hardship should be inflicted by long travel. The "feeble" should be provided for in what would be a combination of the almshouse and infirmary, and might be called the hospital. Children might be sent to the district schools, or distributed amongst cottagers of good character. Another reform suggested in the paper was that power should be given to the guardians to detain for a certain period those who are continually claiming their discharge, and running in and out of the house.

In dealing with the same subject of poor-law administration, Mr. Francis Fox attributed the failure of the existing system to the non-recognition of certain principles, which, he said, were essential for preserving the actual fabric in a healthy condition. Foremost amongst these was that principle of mutual friendship and interest which entered so essentially into feudalism. The founders of the poor-laws in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Elizabeth failed to recognise the golden chain of mutual friendship which had formerly so powerfully bound class to class, and had done so much to repress pauperism. Every organisation of poor relief it was contended ought to embody the principle of sympathy and union of interests of one class towards another. The guardians of the poor should have a sense of individual and personal responsibility impressed upon them by the charge or oversight of a definite number of families. A broad line of separation should be established between the pauperism of idleness and the poverty of misfortune. No relief should be afforded to the able-bodied except in the form of wages.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

THE MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY BILL.

Mr. John Scott read a paper on the question, contributed by Mr. Alfred Hill, who was unavoidably absent. The object of the paper was to suggest certain amendments in the details of the measure, and not in any way to discuss its principles, which have virtually been already adopted by the Legislature. The principal suggestions which Mr. Hill offered were to this effect: The first section of the Bill, whilst giving to married women the full right of disposing of their property, withheld from them the right of disposing of freehold or copyhold property, save by will. This anomaly the writer considered should be removed, and all property, whether of land or goods, or otherwise, held alike. The fourth and fifth sections again, giving to a woman married before the passing of the Act, as well as after the Act, full right over property acquired subsequent to the adoption of the Act, amount to an infringement of the vested rights of the husband, who may, for instance, have paid all his wife's debts contracted before marriage on the supposition that he would be recouped by her earnings after marriage. Existing marriages, where settlements have been made, should be exempted from the action of the Bill, inasmuch as the parties might be held by their acts to have made law for themselves. The security to the wife of her property and earnings renders the provision of alimony to the wife during the trial of a suit in the Divorce Court no longer necessary. A wife may be now held to have acted under marital subjection to such an extent as to entitle her to be excused from the consequences of felonies committed by her in the presence of her husband; and she ought to be henceforth held responsible for them, unless she can prove such compulsion as would amount to the ordinary common law defence of duress.

The Hon. Beach Lawrence showed that all questions affecting the law of marriage were strictly international questions; and having pointed out the law of marriage as established by the Council of Trent, prior to which date no ceremony of any kind was required, he touched upon the law as it existed in various parts of Christendom. He then remarked that the Irish bishops considered any marriage valid where there was mutual consent of the parties. Adverting more particularly to the question under consideration, Mr. Lawrence considered it only just that a woman should retain the entire control of the property she brought with her, and by making that property unsaleable by creditors, no matter how improvident a husband might be, herself and her children would be saved from becoming objects of charity. If a man should be deprived of the means of support, he had a safe and sure resource in the property his wife might have brought with her. In former times the law gave some compensation to a woman in consequence of the right of dower which she possessed; but that right had now become perfectly worthless. He did not agree with the marriage law of France, which constituted the husband and wife as co-partners, inasmuch as if the husband died before the wife his relatives often came in and deprived the widow of property which, perhaps, had been contributed by herself. After remarking that the American law of marriage was based entirely upon the English law, the speaker said that although in that country the privileges of women were still retained as respected dower, yet at the same time changes had been introduced in most States of the Union which were based essentially upon the principle embodied in the measure they were discussing, and he had never heard a word of complaint in any part of the States on the subject. (Hear, hear.) Among a speculative people like the Americans, the change in many instances had been beneficial, as the wife was often enabled to retain her husband in the position he had occupied in society after his own means had been swept away. (Hear, hear.) In the present Bill marriage was regarded as a simple contract, and the simplest way in which that contract could be confirmed and established the better for morals and humanity; and he conceived it as essential to the good order of society, and to the changes which have taken place in the whole fabric of social institutions, that every married woman should retain the control of her own property, and that all her savings should be free from the grasp of her husband's creditors. (Hear, hear.)

Dr. Waddilove considered the Bill went too far. He thought if the wife were once made independent of her husband in her monetary concerns, they would do much to destroy the feeling of dependence on the one part, and consequent affection on the other, which at present existed. From his own knowledge more than half the causes that are brought in the Divorce Court arose from monetary squabbles.

The President did not believe in the alarmist views expressed by Dr. Waddilove, and declared his thorough adherence to the principles of the Bill.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE AND GATES-HEAD ARTICLED CLERKS' SOCIETY.

On Tuesday evening, the 12th inst., the annual meeting of the above society for the election of officers and other general business, was held at the Literary and Philosophical Society, Newcastle, W. C. Bonsfield, Esq., in the absence of the President, R. R. Dees, Esq., ably occupied the chair.

The following are the gentlemen who were elected as officers of the society. President, R. R. Dees, Esq.; Vice-President and Treasurer, Mr. J. E. Joel; Secretaries, Messrs. Isaac Baty, jun., and I. D. Macdonald.

After the general business of the society had been concluded, the chairman called upon Mr. H. Donald Story to perform the principal part of the evening's programme, viz., the presentation, from the members of the society, to C. J. Garbutt, Esq., Solicitor, the late Vice-President of the society, of an elaborate and beautifully-illuminated address on vellum, from the establishment of Messrs. Carter and Co., Newcastle, as a mark of appreciation of his abilities in having obtained "The Clifford's-inn Prize," at the late Easter examination of the Incorporated Law Society. Mr. Story in suitable terms made the presentation, and Mr. Garbutt feelingly replied.

A vote of thanks to the chairman brought the interesting proceedings to a close.

LEGAL NEWS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.—The will of E. Catherwood, Esq., late of Arundel-square, Barnsbury Park, and formerly of Hoxton, was proved under 14,000l. personality—the executors appointed being his brother, George Catherwood, and his (testator's) cousin, Alfred Catherwood, since deceased. The will is dated Aug. 6, 1863; and testator died June 16 last, aged sixty-seven. Probate was granted on the 5th inst. He has left the following charitable bequests, viz.:—To the Church Pastoral Aid Society, the Religious Tract Society, British and Foreign Bible Society, Irish Church Missions, the Society for the Promotion of Christianity among the Jews, and the Church Missionary Society, each 100l., free of duty; to the Parochial Schools, St. Leonard's, Shoreditch, 100l.; the Sunday and Day Schools, St. John's, Hoxton, and St. Mark's, Old-street, each 50l.; to the Rev. J. D. Williams, head master, Collegiate Grammar School, Brecon, 500l.; and a like bequest to a goddaughter of his (testator's) sister, and annuities and legacies to his servants. The residue of his property he leaves to his said brother, George Catherwood, absolutely.—The will of the Right Rev. Walter Kerr Hamilton, D.D., Lord Bishop of Salisbury, has been proved in the principal registry, and the personality sworn under 14,000l. The executors are Isabel Elizabeth Hamilton, the relict; Mr. Edward William Terrick Hamilton, the brother; Mr. Edmund Walter Hamilton, the son; and the Rev. Francis Lear. The will is dated Sept. 8, 1855, and a codicil April 15, 1869, and the venerable prelate died at the palace at Salisbury on Aug. 1 last, aged 61. His wife, who is the daughter of the late Very Rev. Francis Lear, Dean of Salisbury, receives, beyond her interest in 12,000l. under deed of settlement, a legacy of 500l. and a life interest over the residue of his property, with power to appoint at her decease the principal among their children, three sons and five daughters, as she may think proper.—The will of Mr. Robert Gosling, banker, Fleet-street, and of Portland-place, and Botleys-park, Chertsey, Middlesex, has been proved in the London Court, under 700,000l. personality, the executors being Georgina Vere Gosling, his relict, and Robert Gosling and William Cunliffe Gosling, his sons. The will bears date April 13, 1864, and two codicils 1866 and 1868; and testator died at Botleys-park on the 12th ult., aged 74. He leaves to his wife the jewels and pearls—the latter, after her decease, are to go to his eldest son; he also leaves her an immediate legacy of 1000l., an annuity of 1500l., and the interest of 100,000l. for her life, the principal, at her decease, to be divided among his four sons, William, Herbert, George, and Frederick; and to them he has left the sum of 240,000l., also 10,000l. bank stock, and 20,000l. stock in the South-Western Railway. His mansion and estate, Botleys-park, he leaves to his wife for her life; and it is his wish that his unmarried daughters should reside with their mother. The mansion, after her decease, he gives to his second son, William. Each of his married daughters having received 16,666l. as a marriage portion, he bequeaths the like sum to each of his two unmarried daughters. He has bequeathed to each of his four married daughters a further sum of 10,000l. There is a legacy to his sister, and to each of his godchildren who may be related to him a legacy of 50 guineas. To his partners Richard and Francis Gosling each 300l.; to Mr. Richard Gosling, jun., and Charles J. Sharpe, his partner, each 200l.; to each of his clerks in the banking-house, 50l. free of duty; to the porters, each 10l.; and legacies to his servants. He bequeaths to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and to St. George's Hospital, each 100l. He leaves 500l. to the school, Farnham, Essex, to be added to the sum of 1500l. left for the same object by his brother, William Ellis Gosling. He appoints his son Robert residuary legatee, who, he states, is otherwise amply provided for under the will of testator's late father.—Illustrated London News.

Law and the Lawyers.

As we anticipated, the witnesses committed by the Beveridge Commissioners are to be brought up by a writ of Habeas Corpus, and the question of the validity of their committal argued on the second day of Term. Should they be discharged, which is confidently expected, the next question will be whether the Commissioners are not liable to an action for false imprisonment. They are protected in the same way as justices for any act done in pursuance of their duty; being defunct as a commission they were not within the privilege.

THE annual report of the Law Writers' Provident Institution exhibits a very flourishing state of affairs. After meeting all the claims of the year in the most liberal manner, the balance still shows a profit of 86%. It has accumulated a capital of 2736l. Its sick allowance amounted to 185l. and its payments to the families of deceased members were no less than 150l. Such a society well deserves the encouragement and support of the Profession.

REGARDING the Irish law appointments, consequent on the death of the MASTER of the ROLLS, the correspondent of the Globe wrote on Wednesday evening that the report is general that Mr. SULLIVAN, the Attorney-General, has definitively declared his preference for an immediate reward (of the Church Bill labours) by stepping at once upon the Rolls Bench, and that in the event of Mr. SULLIVAN quitting the Castle and the Parliamentary arena, Mr. BARRY will take possession of the law room in the former place. Mr. Dowse's friends claim the Solicitor-Generalship for him, but the writer thinks that it would not be surprising if the Cardinal's influence were successful on behalf of Mr. SHERLOCK.

DR. VAUGHAN, the new Master of the Temple, has announced that he will read the Greek Testament with graduates, in the room under the Middle Temple Library, at 8 every morning except Saturday and Sunday. It is understood also that he will visit the members of the Inns as if they were his ordinary parishioners. To the last course we can take no possible exception. As to the former, we fear the attendance will be very small. Why are the benefits to be confined to graduates? Is it to be assumed that no one knows Greek who has not taken a degree? Had Lord DERBY been a member of the Inns under Dr. VAUGHAN he would by the limitation to graduates have been excluded from attending, for he left Christ Church without graduating. And yet there have been few finer Greek scholars than the lamented Earl. There are a great many men at the Bar who are not graduates, but who have, nevertheless, received a sound collegiate or public school education, and who would appreciate as much as anyone an hour in the morning with Dr. VAUGHAN and the Greek Testament.

We noticed recently the extent to which lawyers are going in their attempts to restrain the comments of the press. But an instance has occurred in which even the limit to which we referred has been exceeded. In the case of the Hounslow murder, counsel for the prisoner stated to the court that shortly after the commission of the offence, whatever the offence might be, an extraordinary article appeared in the Times newspaper coupling it with the Pantin murders, and as it was thought proper that the attention of the Court of Queen's Bench should be called to that article, he applied for a postponement of the trial until next session. The learned Judge said he could not regard this as sufficient ground for a postponement. He was sure the jury would not allow themselves to be influenced by anything they might have seen in the Times. We should think not; and if our present procedure cannot be carried out without muzzling the press in all cases where persons may be implicated in the commission of a notorious offence, it will become necessary to think of amending our procedure.

WE learn that Mr. MAINE, in his capacity of Legislative Councillor in India, has been doing good service to that country with reference to the importation of European vagrancy. His Act to prevent and punish European vagrancy, the Times correspondent tells us, is now law. By its provisions all vagrants who persist in begging may be imprisoned for one, two, or three months. From the beginning of next year, and in provinces where there are no workhouses, from the time when such buildings have been supplied, European, American, and Australasian vagrants may be arrested by the police and taken before a full-power magistrate, without being allowed to plead the privilege of European British subjects. They will receive a shilling a day till placed in the workhouse, or when seeking for work with the assistance of the master. When actually in the workhouse they will be fed as in a penitentiary. All who contract to leave India will receive a free passage. "But," remarks the writer, "unless the new Merchant Shipping Acts give India the power, as they ought to do, of legislating for such characters on the high seas, those who refuse to leave the country cannot be forcibly deported. This is the only flaw in the Act, which is likely to cost a good deal of money, with somewhat disproportionate results, until Parliament removes the present obstacle to legislation. To stop the supply of vagrants the Australasian colonies have been informed that any shipmaster who knowingly brings an ex-felon or ticket-of-leave man to India will be fined. Private employers and companies who have imported or taken from the army persons who become vagrants within the year will have to pay all charges on their account. The Act is really much milder than this summary would lead you to suppose, for there are many detailed provisions as to procedure, with which I need not trouble you. Indeed, it is feared that it will have to be made much more severe."

THIEF MAKING.

IN one week no less than three boys employed as clerks by the publisher of the LAW TIMES were detected stealing postage stamps. Not only was it the practice to purloin portions of any packet within reach, but one of them watched his opportunities when an office was vacated, opened the desk and took, according to the quantity of stamps found there, just so many as would not be likely to be missed. This appears to have been carried on for a long time, but lately he had adopted the more dangerous practice of taking letters brought to the office, or with which he was entrusted to stamp, or for carrying to the post-office, opening such as appeared to have postage stamps in them and destroying the letter.

To this it seems they were tempted by the facility provided for converting their plunder into cash at the post-offices. Thus the privilege given to postmasters to buy stamps is producing an unanticipated mischief. It is not too much to say that thousands of thieves are created by the readiness with which they are enabled to dispose of the stolen property. A clerk or servant has but to secrete a postage stamp, or stop a letter on its way to or from his employer, and he can exchange that stamp for coin at the nearest post-office.

A correspondent of the Times some days ago directed the attention of the Government to this form of thief-making; for the boy who begins by stealing postage stamps will certainly be encouraged by impunity to try his hand at other plunder. A partial remedy would be to forbid postmasters from the purchase of less than a certain quantity at once—say ten shillings' worth—and to take the name and address of the seller; to prohibit them also from buying stamps of children; in fact to apply to them similar provisions to those which have been passed to prevent marine-store dealers from encouraging young thieves by facilities for turning their crimes to account.

Another interference of the law with the process of thiefmaking is much wanted. In the instance to which we refer, the worst of the boys was observed to be continually reading the cheap thieves' literature which encourages crime by painting criminals as heroes. Surely this is not less noxious than the prohibited literature of Holywell-street? Why should it not be treated in the same manner? The authorities who determine what is indecency might be permitted also to determine what is incentive to crime. The suppression of thieves' literature would be a greater boon to society than the suppression of erotic books and prints; the former creates criminals, the latter only stimulates the passions of those who are already degraded and demoralised.

A WARNING.

A SOLICITOR at Braintree has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment for appropriating to his own use the moneys of his client. This is, we believe, the first time that the offence, which is only too common, has been punished by indictment, plundered clients having been ignorant of the remedy or reluctant to enforce it. Now that it is known there can be no doubt that it will be more frequently resorted to by those whose confidence has been betrayed. Nor in the true interest of the Profession can we object to the law itself or to its enforcement. In very truth there is no real difference between robbery by appropriating the money which clients have confided to the care of a solicitor, or which he has received for them in the course of business, and picking a pocket, or robbing a till. If anything, the solicitor is guilty of the greater crime, for he adds breach of trust to theft, and uses the confidence of his employer for the purpose of robbing him. No excuse whatever can be offered for this crime, for no circumstances whatever will justify a solicitor in using for his own purposes the money which he holds in trust for others, whether that money has been given to him by his client for investment, or whether it has been received by him for his client. The moment he applies any portion of that money to his own use, he is guilty of dishonesty, and has committed a crime, even if done with design to refund it.

We fear that the offence of thus misappropriating the property they hold in trust is more frequent than the public are aware. It results from the practice, against which we have so often and earnestly warned our readers, of mingling their clients' money with their own—a course to be sedulously shunned by every prudent solicitor. Debts recovered, purchase moneys received, rents collected, and such like, are too frequently paid to the private account of the solicitor at the bank; he cannot, or will not, distinguish what of the balance is his own, and what the property of others which he holds in trust; he draws upon the whole balance for his private uses, invades the property of his client, deluding his conscience with the suggestion that he does not know what is his own, averts some present pressure by the tempting crime, in the vain hope that something may turn up to save him. It is thus that hundreds of solicitors have been brought to ruin in times past and if the Woodbridge example should be followed, it is thus that many will hereafter be brought to the felon's dock and the convict's prison.

The warning we have given before we would emphatically repeat now. Make it an inflexible rule never to mingle your clients' moneys with your own. Keep a separate account at the bank and pay over whatever you receive for a client with the least possible delay. By observing this rule, you will avoid the double risk of temptation and of error. You will both gain clients and keep them; for there is nothing that so recommends a solicitor to men of business as prompt paying over of debts collected and moneys received, and it will promote your peace of mind as much as it will advance your prosperity.

THE MORAL OF THE BRIBERY COMMISSIONS.

If the relief caused to the public mind by the cessation of the labours of the bribery commissioners is as great as that felt by the Profession to which the commissioners belong it must be very substantial. Day by day during the Long Vacation these commissions have dragged their long lengths along, the commissioners appearing to vie with each other in the number and stupidity of their jokes, the absurdity of their moral lectures, or the abuse of the process of examination and cross-examination committed to their hands. In two or three prominent instances the choice of the Attorney-General of members of the Bar to fill these offices was eminently unfortunate, and to those appointments mainly is due the odium and ridicule which have fallen upon much of the proceedings.

We had contemplated going through the reports of the doings of the several commissions furnished by the daily papers; but we are unwilling to make permanent record of the bad jokes of at least one of the Norwich Commissioners; the harsh and insensitive persecution of a member of the Bridgewater Commission; or of the general incompetency of the Beverley Commissioners. These, we fear, will be still fresh in the recollections of our readers and the public generally, and we have only to consider the moral to be drawn from the proceedings.

In the first place we have already expressed the opinion that the constitution of the tribunal is mistaken. An investigation committed to three commissioners of equal powers entails similar duties on all three. If it were not for the possibility of a difference of opinion as to the report to be made, one commissioner would do just as well as three, and probably a great deal better. It was for this reason that a week or two since we observed how infinitely preferable it would be were a Judge to conduct the inquiry. And we cannot see why this suggestion should not be carried out. The object of a commission is to convict the borough. One half of the evidence given at Bridgewater or Beverley would have been sufficient for that purpose. The great evil attending the exercise of inquisitorial judicial powers by three Judges at the same time is too obvious to need illustration.

The conclusion to be arrived at is very simple. If the trials of boroughs for bribery are to be criminal trials with something added to the rigour of the process, let the procedure be assimilated to that of our criminal courts, only removing the imposition of silence on the person accused. We saw it suggested in the Daily News not long since that there should be a Government inspector of elections, that he should suggest to what boroughs judicial scrutiny should be directed, and that he should discover the persons suspected of corruption, and at once indict them before the Recorder, to whom should be given all the necessary powers which he does not at present possess. This inspector would have agents throughout the country who would procure evidence as the election proceeded, and thus take away from townsfolk the odium of being witnesses one against the other. If the convictions before the Recorder became very numerous it might then be a question for the Government whether the city or borough should retain the franchise.

By this means bribery would be punished instead of condoned as regards individuals upon confession as is now done by election commissioners. But to pass a law which would bring swift punishment upon the offenders against the Bribery Acts would require earnestness on the part of the Legislature. This we do not believe in, and shall steadily refuse to believe in until we have some more conclusive evidence of its existence.

THE DECLINE OF THE SELF GOVERNMENT OF THE CLERGY.

In the new number of Macmillan's Magazine, Mr. ROWSELL discusses the question, "What is the Court of Arches, what is the Privy Council, that they should sit in judgment on causes ecclesiastical? What is the nature of the machinery provided by law for the settlement of questions which may arise in the Church?"

This is a peculiarly important question at the present time, but we cannot congratulate Mr. ROWSELL upon having so dealt with it as to give a contribution of any value to the literature of the subject. And we now propose only to glance at his article with the view of showing how gradually, but how surely the bishops and clergy have lost all their old rights of self-government.

As our author remarks at the outset, from the Norman Conquest till the reign of EDWARD I. ecclesiastics in England were for every purpose amenable only to strictly ecclesiastical courts, which had, however, for certain important purposes, jurisdiction also over the laity. The attempts made by several kings, especially by HENRY II. to put a bridle on the churchmen, proved ineffectual. But the moral effect of the "Constitutions of Clarendon"—marred though it was by the criminal blunder involved in the murder of Becket—was very considerable, and was apparent for years afterwards in the conduct of the church towards the State. The precedent set by HENRY II. was never forgotten by the kings who came after him. The clergy, on their part, remembering how near they had been to subjection, were wise in time, and not only conceded points to resolute kings who required them, but were careful not to provoke such kings beyond the bounds of patience.

The ecclesiastical courts of that period, which, it will be seen, had a jurisdiction over the laity to some extent, were three in number: the archdeacon's, the bishop's, and the archbishop's. An appeal lay from the lower to the higher, and there was a right of final appeal to the judgment of the Pope, who could try the matter either before himself in Rome, or through a legate armed with full powers. These tribunals took cognisance of all questions relative to the church itself, and of all criminal, civil, or ecclesiastical matters in which clerks were concerned. They had jurisdiction also over laymen in questions pro salute anime. Such were brawling, doing violence, or committing other irreverent conduct in church or churchyard, neglecting to repair ecclesiastical buildings, incest, or incontinence. Their jurisdiction further extended over all causes testamentary and matrimonial."

The scope of the jurisdictions of these courts over the clergy was very wide. As Mr. ROWSELL remarks, the clergy were amenable to them for neglect of duty, immoral conduct, preaching doctrines at variance with the Articles of the Church, and suffering dilapidations. But, he adds, "it was in the matter of heresy that the ecclesiastical courts became most prominent, and for the purpose of stopping heresy they deemed the power already in their hands to be insufficient. Until the rise and growth of Wycliffism the spiritual court had been able to deal effectually with such heresies as presented themselves. These were probably few, and rather fanciful than real. For three hundred years after the Conquest men were too much occupied in accumulating themselves to the new state of things—in welding the uncongenial elements which were in England into one nation, in conducting the wars which were incidental to the establishment of a Norman kingdom in the country—to allow of their entering upon original speculations on religious questions. Besides which, the fear of the powers already in the hands of the clergy was enough to restrain the aspirations of those few who really found time to think."

We in the present day, and with the example of Dr. TEMPLE before our eyes, can very well understand what the dominion of the clergy over freethinkers amongst their own body must have been when they had supreme ecclesiastical jurisdiction over them. But the governing dignitaries were cautious to be well supported. "It is curious to remark," says our author "that the archbishop or bishop's court before which heretics were tried seems to have consisted, not of any fixed number or rank of persons, but of counsel chosen at the discretion of the bishop, to sit with him as his assessors. It shows at all events a desire on the part of the bishop, acting according to the light that was in him, to do right, that in important cases involving difficult points of doctrine—one can hardly call it law—he summoned a large number of assessors to assist him in arriving at a judgment. Thus, in the case of REGINALD PEACOCK, Bishop of Chichester, the author of 'The Repressor,' and many other works towards the end of the fourteenth century, the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY delivered the writings of the prisoner to twenty-four doctors, who were directed to examine them, and report whether there were heresies in them or not. They formed a sort of ecclesiastical grand jury; and upon their presentment, which was to the effect that there were certain specified heresies in the books, the court, consisting of the ARCHBISHOP and the BISHOPS of LINCOLN and ROCHESTER, gave judgment, after hearing what the BISHOP of CHICHESTER had to say in his own defence."

So things went on until that terrible scourge of the Church, HENRY VIII., came upon the scene. The old statute of Hen. 4 was repealed, and it was ordered that heretics were to be questioned in open court before the ordinary, and have an open trial. And, as we noticed last week, this monarch assumed the headship of the Church, and the spiritual prerogatives of the Pope. As head of the Church, he claimed the power to bring ecclesiastical causes from the ordinary's court before himself in council.

Again, as regarded the clerical power of excommunication, it gradually passed into the cognisance of the Court of Chancery and the Queen's Bench. By 5 Eliz. c. 23, provision was made that the writ de excommunicato capiendo should issue out of the Court of Chancery on the bishop's certificate, and be returnable in term time in the King's Bench, where the cause of arrest might be fully set forth, in order that the Judges might see whether or not it was a proper one for the decision of the ecclesiastical Judge.

The purely ecclesiastical courts which now exist, are either subject to the supervision of common law courts or lay Judges. And it seems the desire of the bishops that they should not be called upon to decide judicially upon the offences of their clergy.

Finally, as Mr. ROWSELL well remarks, "The spirit of HENRY II. might be consoled for the miscarriage of the 'Constitutions of Clarendon,' could he see ecclesiastical courts in England, the distinctive feature of which is that no clergyman has the power to decide any matter of importance to the clergy, and no matter whatsoever which can seriously affect the laity."

SEDITION.

In a firm and manly letter Mr. GLADSTONE has declared the resolution of the Government not to yield to the menaces with which the release of the Fenian felons has been demanded by sympathisers in England and Ireland.

The applause that has greeted this display of firmness will, we venture to hope, encourage the Government to put an end to another nuisance, the Hyde Park meetings, and not on Sunday alone, but at any time. The parks are appropriated for the recreation of the public, and no section of the public has a right to take possession of them for their own purposes, to the exclusion of the peaceful and the orderly—of women, and of children. This should be forbidden, whatever the day or the object of the gathering; but especially should the prohibition be extended to Sunday, not only because such scenes are a desecration of the day, but because that is the holiday of the whole people, on which alone multitudes are enabled to breathe fresh air and tread upon grass. Moreover, the public safety calls for the repression of these assemblies. They are charged with combustibles which may explode at any moment. Doubtless they would be suppressed at last, but who can estimate the mischief that would be done before they could be put down?

All the lawyers are agreed that no public right exists to hold meetings in Hyde Park. The Home Office should have this determined by proceedings, not vindictive, against some two or three of the persons engaged in these meetings. Should the Queen's Bench pronounce their illegality, then notice should be given that they would no longer be permitted, and any attempt to act in defiance of the law should be resisted by force. If need be, the park should be filled with soldiers—for obedience to the law should be enforced at any cost. Should there be a remaining doubt as to the law, Parliament should be invited to make it clear by the only course demanded by justice and the interests of the public—to forbid the parks being used for meetings of any kind. None could reasonably complain of this, for they are strictly dedicated to the recreation of the whole community, poor as well as rich, and it is the manifest duty of the Government to see that they are not impeded in the full enjoyment of this right by any section of the community for any purposes whatever.

LAND LAW REFORM.

The real aim of the present movement is against all property, and not against property in land only. If any, even the slightest, departure from justice, the smallest invasion of property, be sanctioned in dealing with the land laws, it will inevitably and speedily lead to the plunder of all other property. If the excuse that Ireland is an exception be allowed to sanction the invasion of the rights of property in Ireland, it will assuredly lead directly to like demands and like concession in England. Indeed, the new Land Reform League has taken care that there shall be no doubt as to what are the objects for which it is to agitate.

The following is a short report of their last meeting:

The representatives of several working class organisations met at the Bell Inn, Old Bailey, to resume the discussion on the land question. As on the previous occasion, the chair was taken by Mr. Lucraft, who explained when opening the proceedings that the object of the working class movement respecting the land had no attitude of antagonism to the movement headed by Mr. Mill. Mr. Mill's object was to facilitate the purchase of land by those who had money, whilst the object of the present movement was to help the landless and the moneyless, the men, 10,000 of whom in London alone knew not where they should go for to-morrow's breakfast. They might help Mr. Mill's movement; certainly they would not, and did not oppose it. Mr. Weston moved the first resolution. The speaker said he had been accused of using strong language, but his language was not so strong as that of Lord Clarendon, who had called the landlords of Ireland "felons." He (Mr. Weston) believed that the English landlords were not a pin's point better than their Irish brethren. After one or two further and general observations he concluded by moving the resolution, the purport of which was the restoration of the land to the people, and the abolition of the practice of usury. Mr. Fielding (Penge) seconded the resolution. Mr. Osborne moved an amendment, recommending home colonisation as a more speedy remedy for the distress of the working classes. ("Bosh!") He hoped the meeting was not going to be as bad as the House of Commons. (Hear, hear.) There was a mass of poverty throughout the country that would melt the heart even of a Tory. He told the gentleman who cried "Bosh" that it was "Bosh" to talk of nationalising the land to starving thousands. Mr. Bradlaugh supported the original resolution, on the understanding that the object of the league was to take the land and the political power out of the hands of those who monopolised both as speedily as possible. The resolution was carried by acclamation. Mr. Hennessy moved that the present system of landholding and letting had become intolerable, and its removal an imperative necessity. His plan was to buy up the landlords' rights in the way in which the rights of the Irish Church had been bought up. He would abrogate landlords, game laws, primogeniture, unpaid magistrates, and poor-law guardians. The pleasure parks of the country, he thought, would be admirably adapted for home colonisation. Mr. Boon seconded the resolution. The land might be taken for the people, as it had been taken for the railways, and sold according to the Prussian system. There were 31,000,000 acres of untitled land in England.

This is plain speaking, and it is important as the manifesto of the most powerful organization in this country. In Ireland, a more summary method of settling land law reform is openly advanced by the newspapers. It is, to hang all the landlords. That we do not exaggerate will be seen from the following leader in one of the most popular and widely circulated of the Irish journals.

If anyone is capable of giving us a correct interpretation of British law it is a British Minister. A very distinguished Minister (Lord Clarendon), then, has said that the landlord who plunders his tenants of their improvements is guilty of felony. Now this being accepted, the following syllogism, we take it, is unimpeachable in point of law:—

It is lawful to resist a felon:

A plundering landlord is a felon:

Therefore it is lawful to resist a plundering landlord.

This is clearly pure logic. But the case may be explored still further. The bad landlord, when he comes a-plundering, no more than another felon, will be put off by remonstrances. Is it lawful, then, to oppose force to force, to repel the plunderer by force of arms, to protect one's property from the felonious attack, even at the risk of the felon's life? So holds the law. A late instance was decided in Cork. A man entered a gentleman's house at Blackrock and requested his gun. The gentleman shot him, believing his life was in danger, in protecting his property. The jury returned a verdict of justifiable homicide, the judge having carefully explained that this verdict was authorised by law.

Here, then, the syllogism may run thus:—

It is lawful to shoot a felon, if the victim in protecting his property believes his life imminently endangered by the felon's attack.

The plundering landlord is a felon.

Therefore, it is lawful to shoot a plundering landlord, if the victim in protecting his improvements—his property—believes his life imminently endangered by the felon landlord's attack.

The Cabinet has held its first meeting, and it is said that the Irish Land Laws were the subject of consideration. The task of framing a measure will be difficult. It is remarkable that, with the exception of the summary schemes of the league, no definite plan has been proposed by any one of those who have spoken or written upon the subject; from which it may be gathered that the difficulty of discovery is very great indeed. We have endeavoured, in these papers, to follow the stream of discussion and extract the views of all the various parties, so as to assist the judgment of readers who may have occasion to deal with it practically. The only test of the practicability of any scheme of law reform is to embody it in a Bill. It is when we attempt to put a law into working form that we discover its defects. When loose schemes of land law reform come before us, our course is to endeavour to cast them into the shape of a skeleton of a Bill. We have thus tried all that have yet appeared, and all have failed to endure the test. The rule by which to examine them is clear enough. Does this reform, as it is called, take anything away from the landlord to give it to the tenant, and is this to be done without the consent of the party to be deprived? If such is the nature of the scheme, it is, in plain terms, a robbery, by what ever gentle name its true character may be sought to be concealed, and any temporary advantage gained by it will be dearly purchased by the certainty of a future harvest of still greater wrong, of which the first wrong is sure to be the fertile parent.

BANKERS AS GRATUITOUS BAILEES.

SINCE the days of Chief Justice Holt the subject of bailments has probably never been so elaborately dealt with as in the case of Giblin v. McMullen, in the Privy Council which we reported last week, a most important case as affecting the relationship between bankers and their customers.

The facts were, that a customer of the Union Bank of Australia entrusted to it certain railway debentures. These debentures were placed in the ordinary depository, but they were extracted by a dishonest cashier, and converted to his own purposes. The jury, at the trial, found a verdict against the bankers for the full value of the securities. A rule was made absolute to set aside the verdict, and from this decision of the colonial court, an appeal was made to the Privy Council which upheld the decision.

The bankers being gratuitous bailees, the question really turned on the meaning to be given to the term "gross negligence." It was contended by the Solicitor-General on behalf of the appellant that the question of negligence being one of fact, had been properly left to the jury, whose finding ought not to be disturbed. The negligence alleged against the bank was in allowing the cashier access alone to the strong room, and in not employing an honest person as cashier, and it was contended that although the individual had been long in the employ of the bank, the fact that a gentleman from England had called on the manager and told him that he had expected to receive money from the cashier, and had not received it, was such a notification as ought to have put the bank on its guard, and consequently that they were guilty of gross negligence in the keeping of the securities.

On the other hand, it was argued that if the question whether bankers have taken proper care of the securities of their customers is to be left to the jury, no banker would accept such a liability without reward, and that the negligence to make the respondents liable must be wilful negligence, which would be near to fraud. We will first see what the Privy Council say as to gross negligence. Upon this the dictum of Lord Cranworth in Beal v. The South Devon Railway Company, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 184, and the judgment of Willes, J., approving of that dictum in Grill v. General Iron Screw Collier Company, 14 L. T. Rep. N. S. 715 were adopted. Willes, J., said: "Confusion has arisen from regarding negligence as a positive instead of a negative word. It is really the absence of such care as it was the duty of the defendant to use." Crompton, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is said that there may be difficulty in defining what gross negligence is, but I agree in the remark of the Lord Chief Baron in the court below, where he says 'There is a certain degree of negligence to which everyone attaches great blame. It is a mistake to suppose that things are not different because a strict line of demarcation cannot be drawn between them;" and he added, "for all practical purposes the rule may be stated to be, that the failure to exercise reasonable care, skill, and diligence, is gross negligence." M. Smith, J., in the case in which the above-mentioned observations of Willes, J., were made, said: "The use of the term gross negligence is only one way of stating that less care is required in some cases than in others, as in the case of gratuitous bailees, and it is more correct and scientific to define the degrees of care than the degrees of negligence." Commenting on this case, Lord Chelmsford said: "It is hardly correct to say that the Court of Exchequer Chamber in the case referred to adopted the view of Lord Cranworth as to the impropriety of the term 'gross negligence;' and the judgment of the Privy Council proceeds:—The 'epithet 'gross,' is certainly not without its significance. The negligence for which, according to Lord Holt, a gratuitous bailee incurs liability is such as to involve a breach of confidence or trust, not arising merely from some want of foresight or mistake of judgment, but from some culpable default. No advantage would be gained by substituting a positive for a negative phrase, because the degree of care and diligence which a bailee must exercise corresponds with the degree of negligence for which he is responsible, and there would be the same difficulty of defining the extent of the positive duty in each case as the degree of neglect of it which incurs responsibility. In truth, this difficulty is inherent in the nature of the subject, and, though degrees of care are not definable, they are with some approach to certainty distinguishable; and in every case of this description in which the evidence is left to the jury, they must be led by a cautious and discriminating direction of the judge to distinguish, as well as they can, degrees of things which run more or less into each other."

Here we have another of the judicial difficulties which abound in our procedure, similar to which is the dilemma when a Judge is to decide the question of libel or no libel, and what is the meaning of "corruptly" in the Corrupt Practices Act. Such difficulties are inevitable, and call for the exercise of the highest order of judicial mind.

Incidentally as regards this case we would notice a point which is of some importance. It was argued by the Solicitor-General that when a banker takes charge of extremely valuable securities every care for their safety ought to be supplied, and that such was not taken may be presumed from the fact that additional precautions have been adopted since this loss occurred. The fallacy of such an argument is shown in a case in the Exchequer which we report to-day. There a pointsman had run an engine on to a branch line and caused damage for which the company was sued. The engine was a runaway, the one man in charge of it who for twenty years had singlehanded taken it to be coaled having fallen in a fit. Since the accident the company took precautions to prevent a recurrence of the catastrophe. It was argued that this fact was evidence of negligence previous to the catastrophe; but the court held not, Mr. Baron Bramwell observing that because the world grows wiser every day it is not to be concluded that it was foolish before. The argument is a very seductive one, and likely to lead to error.

PENALTIES UNDER THE CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACT 1869.

THERE would appear to be a somewhat important defect in this Act, and it is a defect the less excusable inasmuch as it did not exist in the Act of 1866, which the Act of this year repeals. This relates to the recovery of penalties by summary procedure.

By sect. 30 of 29 Vict. c. 2, "penalties under this Act, and expenses directed to be recovered in a summary manner, may be recovered before two justices in manner directed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, intituled 'An Act to facilitate the performance of the duties of Justices of the Peace out of sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary convictions and orders,' or any Act amending the same, and in Scotland by summary complaint before the sheriff, sheriff substitute, or two justices, or in boroughs before the magistrates, in manner provided by the Summary Procedure Act 1864."

By the Act of this year (sect. 85), "penalties and forfeitures shall be recoverable and applicable under an order of the Privy Council, or an order or regulation of a local authority, as penalties and forfeitures under this Act are recoverable and applicable." Turning to Part IX., which relates to "offences and legal proceedings," we find no jurisdiction given to justices; but after certain offences and their penalties are stated, it is added (sect. 104), "And in any such case he shall be liable on conviction, in the discretion of the justices, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour, in lieu of the pecuniary penalty to which he is liable under the Act." Again, in sect. 107, reference is made to the appearance of companies "before justices," and in sect. 108 it is enacted "If any party feels aggrieved by the dismissal of his complaint by justices or by any determination or adjudication of justices," &c., he may appeal. But although there are these references to justices, there is no provision similar to the one which we have cited from the Act of 1866.

The Privy Council has power, under sect. 75, to make generally any orders whatsoever which they think it expedient for the better execution of the Act, but it could not give a summary jurisdiction to justices, and the only question is, whether the Court of Queen's Bench would imply the existence of such jurisdiction from the sections to which we have referred.

WE have now to consider at what point an agent ceases to be an agent, so as to make a candidate responsible for his acts. And, in the first place, it is to be noticed that treachery will deprive an agent of his capacity as such. This was expressly pointed out by Mr. Justice Blackburn in the Stafford Borough Petition, at p. 212 of 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. He said, referring to the proceedings of one Machin, "If the evidence was to the effect that Machin, though he was then a paid agent of Colonel Meller, was at that time planning to betray Colonel Meller, that it was what is called a plant, then I do not think that Machin could any longer be considered an agent of Colonel Meller, so that his acts would vacate the election. I wish to point out the distinction which I make, that according as the law stands at present, if a member employs an agent, and that agent contrary to his wish, and contrary to his directions, commits a corrupt act, the sitting member is responsible for it; but where he employs an agent, and the agent treacherously or traitorously agrees with the other side, then if he does a corrupt act it would not vacate the seat, unless it is proved that the corrupt act was at the especial request of the member himself or some untainted and authorised agent of the member who directed the act to be done." His Lordship was very particular upon the point, for he added, "The distinction is pretty obvious, and I mention it to avoid any difficulty or doubt that there might be hereafter, from its being supposed that I have said anything more than I do say; I say if Machin was a treacherous agent he loses the power of upsetting the seat by reason of his unauthorised acts of corruption; it would require actual proof of authority in order to make it so. It is a very different affair if a man being an agent has been tricked by the other party into committing a corrupt act, he himself honestly still intending to act as an agent."

Express authority will, of course, re-create an agency which has lapsed or been annihilated. As above, it will do away with the effect of treachery; and in the case of corrupt acts done after the election, the agency, having ceased with the close of the election, may be revived by express authority, so as to constitute the person an agent, and thus to affect the return. "The agency at the election," said Mr. Justice Blackburn, in the Norfolk petition, which we report this week, "which was solely from the canvassing before the election, expires with the election, whether or no a person who had been requested to canvass would be an agent whose misconduct would avoid the election, would depend upon the evidence; but unless there is something to show continuing authority, that person could not, if he had given a feast ten days after the election, by that act upset the election."

Further, and lastly, it is perfectly clear that where there is a coalition between candidates, each becomes the agent of the other, and the agents of the one become the agents of the other. The limit of this agency is shown in the Norfolk petition before referred to. Here we conclude the consideration of the very difficult question of agency. Notwithstanding the diffidence expressed by all the Judges in dealing with it, and their doubts concerning the various attempts which have been made to define it, we do not conceive that there will be very much difficulty in dealing with the next batch of petitions by the light of the judgments which we have been examining.

We will now say a few concluding words on

COALITION BETWEEN CANDIDATES.

The prominent case of a coalition is that of Coventry, and there we find that Mr. Justice Willes elaborately states what is a legitimate coalition. By the 3rd clause of the 2nd section of the Act of 1854 it is made bribery for any one directly or indirectly by himself or any other person on his behalf to make any gift, loan, offer, promise, procurement, or agreement to or for any person in order to induce such person to procure or endeavour to procure the return of any person to serve in Parliament. Now in the Coventry Case, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 405, in the letter which constituted the agreement between the candidates, there was a clause providing that they should contest the city in the same interest, and that they should be faithful to one another. It was a case, said the Judge, in which each made the other his agent, and the agents of the other his agents, and in which they agreed to stand by one another, an agreement which they carried into effect by stating on their canvass that they respectively did not wish for a vote for one which was not given to the other. But there was no agreement as to money; no consideration passing from Mr. Eaton to Mr. Hill, the latter having acquired some influence by previously contesting the city. Had it been otherwise, the learned Judge says, it would most unquestionably have been bribery on both sides, in the case of the person who gave and the person who received the benefit. But, although no money passed from the one to the other, the legal expenses of both were paid by one. That payment, it was argued, was illegal and voided the election. This is a very important point, and the more so by reason of the decision given, which was, that it is perfectly legitimate for one candidate to pay the expenses of a colleague.

The whole question turned upon the mode in which the third clause of the 2nd section is to be read, and its proper application to the case of a coalition between candidates is stated by Mr. Justice Willes to be this:—The payment must be a payment for the purchase of influence, "it must be a payment to some person who has great influence in a place, to purchase that influence; it must be a payment, or gift, or loan of something valuable to him in consideration of his lending his influence or his assistance in the election." And his Lordship then distinctly said, "As it appears to me, it is not an offence within the third clause for a candidate to bring forward another person to stand as his colleague. . . . I must pronounce my opinion, as I entertain it that to bring forward another candidate under such circumstances, without a view to purchase his influence, with the intention of serving a man's party, and because he does not mind spending his money on the legitimate expenses of the election himself, and of the other candidate, with a view only to serve his party, and not with a view to purchase influence for himself, does not fall within that third clause to which reference has been made."

Then of course there is an important question of fact whether in the particular instance the agreement to pay the expenses of a colleague did not amount to or was intended to be, a purchase of influence. The matter is one of such very considerable importance that we here extract the learned judge's review of the facts upon which he concluded in favour of Mr. Eaton's purity of intention. "It has not been suggested that I can recollect or find in the evidence of either of the members that Mr. Hill was a person who had any local connection in the way of birth or inhabitancy or property in the city. I do not think it was suggested that he had any influence to purchase in respect of any of those local causes; he had nothing to sell in that respect, and therefore no one ought to charge upon Mr.

Eaton apart from his mercantile experience, the intention of buying of Mr. Hill that which Mr. Hill had not to sell. Mr. Hill had stood at a former election for the city, he had stood against Mr. Carter, and he had been defeated by a majority of 288. He had been defeated by a considerable majority of the old constituency. He had been defeated under circumstances which more or less disheartened him, and which determined him not to come forward again. He had paid the 800*l.* under the circumstances already explained, not with a view to coming forward again. If he had done that, if it could be fairly charged against him that he had paid illegitimate expenses with a view to coming forward again and being returned, a very different construction might have been placed upon, and a very different credit lent to, his statement, that he paid the 800*l.* worth of bills of illegitimate expenses as a matter of honour. But, referring again to the correspondence of October, and taking the statement of Mr. Hill, as everybody seems disposed to do, and as I am prepared to do, and do, the payment of 800*l.* was not as purchase of influence on his part, and therefore you have to consider whether Mr. Eaton in October did what he did, in purchasing Mr. Hill's influence or the assistance which his influence would enable him to lend. It is difficult to distinguish between influence and assistance at this part of the inquiry under the circumstances to which I have referred, apart from Mr. Hill's unsuccessful contest for the city, apart from his unsuccessful contest in March, and apart from his payment of the 800*l.* of bills, which has been already, I think, sufficiently eliminated from the proper elements of discussion as to the intention of this gentleman. The inquiry, was it a purchase of Mr. Hill's influence? was it a purchase for Mr. Eaton's individual advantage in the contest? was the agreement entered into by Mr. Eaton with the selfish view of aiding himself by the influence? or was what he did fairly to be explained by a desire to serve his party without regard to any influence of Mr. Hill? ought, as it appears to me, to be answered under these circumstances and upon these facts, in favour of the intention of Mr. Eaton."

In the Tanworth petition (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 181), we have an instance in which an alleged coalition was disproved by the acts of the parties. Sir Robert Peel and Sir Henry Bulwer were jointly represented at the registration. But from that period they engaged separate agents. Sir Robert Peel, moreover, confessed that by reason of the operation of the Reform Act, he was anxious for his own return as against Sir Henry Bulwer, and a third candidate who was in the field, and had a pride in heading the poll. It was held that this was evidence to disprove that any partnership existed between Sir Robert Peel and Sir Henry Bulwer, and therefore that each was no more responsible for the acts of the agents of the other than if they were sailing in their respective vessels in company or under convoy, each would be answerable for the damage done by a collision occasioned by the negligence of the crew aboard the other.

The subject is now exhausted. The practice of presenting and conducting petitions we have here nothing to do with. We have concerned ourselves with the principles affecting the working of the Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, and we can honestly conclude our survey with the remark that with one or two exceptions the judgments have been singularly consistent and characterised by a judicial ability unrivalled in any age or in any country.

XII. PILOT OF BOARD (continued.)

33. Compulsory pilotage—Pilot solely in fault—Pilot Act—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—A steam vessel belonging to the port of London, and whilst within the limits of the port, came into collision with a brig at anchor, solely through the fault of the pilot. The owners not being compelled to have a pilot on board, they were held liable for the misconduct. Opposite constructions of 59th section of Pilot Act (6 Geo. 4, c. 125), and 379th section of Merchant Shipping Act 1854. The law on the point considered to be in great confusion: (The Stettin, A. C., June 24, 1862; 1 Mar.

34. Compulsory pilotage—Hull Pilot Act—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—Compulsory pilotage, under the Hull Pilot Act (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 105), and Merchant Shipping Act 1854, of vessels in river Humber. Provisions as to outward bound ships, whether applicable to inward bound ships. Distinction between Goole pilots and Humber pilots. Resolutions and bye-laws, of the Corporation of the port of Hull, so far as pertinent to the case, considered. (The Dock Company v. Brown, 2 B. & A. 43, and Beilby v. Raper, 3 B. & Ad. 284, cited by the court: (The Killarney, A. C., May 16, 1861 and Feb. 18, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 233.)

35. Compulsory pilotage—Vessel in tow—Fault of pilot—Narrow channel.—Collision between steamer and sailing vessel in tow of a steam tug, where there was neither starboard nor porting helm in good time. Pilot compulsorily employed solely in fault. Owners held not liable for damage done. In order to prove a violation of sect. 297 of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, the collision must have taken place in a narrow channel. A narrow channel in this sense means a channel bounded on either side by land primâ facie so that it is impossible, under the circumstances, to navigate at any great width between the two banks: (The Florence Nightingale and the Meander, J. C. P. C., Feb. 2, 1863, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 301; 9 Jur. N. S. 465, affirming judgment of A. C.)

36. Collision between barge and steamer—Pilot on board—Jurisdiction.—A steamer ran into a barge in the Thames and sank her. The steamer had a pilot on board, and the evidence proved that there was culpable negligence, both on the part of the pilot, and of the persons who navigated the steamer. The owners of the steamer were held liable for the damage; the ruling of the court below, that the Admiralty Court has the most extensive jurisdiction in collision cases by virtue of 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 7, affirmed: (The Malvina, J. C. P. C. April 13, 1863, 1 Mar. Law Cas. 341; 9 Jur. N. S. 52; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 403; see 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 369; 31 L. J. 113, Adm.)

37. Compulsory pilotage—Foreign or coasting trade—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—A vessel casually employed in the foreign trade, going from Liverpool with cargo on board for London, in order to proceed as advertised from London on a foreign voyage, held not to be "a ship employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the 379th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, therefore not exempt from compulsory pilotage, nor answerable for collision by pilot's sole default. The case of The Agricola, 2 W. Rob. 10, referred to: (The Lloyd's, otherwise The Sea Queen, A. C. June 30, July 10 and 11, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 391; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 236.)

XIII. RULES OF THE SEA.

(See also Steamers.)

38. Foreign and British ships closehauled and in tow.—A foreign vessel, which was not, at the period in question, bound by our regulations, but by the ordinary rules of the sea, and therefore, being closehauled on the starboard tack, was bound to keep her course, came into collision with a British ship towed by a tug. It was held that the tug being in fact a steamer, it was her duty to get out of the way of another vessel she was meeting; but it appeared that the foreign ship, instead of keeping her course, ported her helm, and came into collision with the ship towed, and she was consequently held liable for the damage. (See this case explained in 1 Mar. Law Cas. 88): (The Cleodon, J. C. P. C. Dec. 20, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 41, affirming the judgment of A. C.)

39. Foreign steamer meeting two brigs—Parallel courses—Sole fault of pilot—Appeal.—Foreign steamer meeting two brigs proceeding in parallel courses in river Thames. Steamer, bound by maritime law to get out of the way, and also bound to follow general custom prevailing in the river Thames, held in fault for starboarding her helm, it not being proved by her that the collision arose solely through the pilot's fault. The court of appeal cannot reverse a judgment of the Admiralty Court upon a doubt whether it is right, but must be quite satisfied that it is wrong, as decided in The North American, 12 Moo. P. C. C. 338: (The Schwalbe, J. C. P. C. Feb. 13, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 42, affirming judgment of A. C.)

40. Ships closehauled on starboard and port tacks—Pleading.—Vessel on the starboard tack, six points from the wind, and therefore closehauled, meeting another vessel on the port tack more than a point freer, it is the duty of the former to keep her course, and of the latter to give way. An erroneous allegation of the mode in which the injury occurred may, as an answer, fail to be proved; and the plaintiff is, nevertheless, equally bound to rely on his own case, and not on the failure of his adversary. Cases of The Ann and The Magnet, The Secla Carmen, and The North American considered: (The East Lothian, J. C. P. C. Feb. 13, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 76, reversing judgment of A. C.)

41. Ships closehauled and in tow—Merchant Shipping Act 1854.—Sect. 296 of Merchant Shipping Act is applicable only to vessels meeting in opposite directions, and not to vessels both going in the same direction. There is no material distinction between a steamer with a ship in tow and a steamer unencumbered. The law on this point accurately laid down in the Kingston by Sea (6 Notes of Cas. 651; 3 W. Rob. 155.). It was not intended to be laid down in the case of The Cleodon (No. 38 hereof) that a steam-tug towing a ship is to be considered as a free steamer. Judgment in that case explained. Both ships in fault, damages divided. No costs of appeal: (The Independence and the Arthur Gordon, J. C. P. C. March 15, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 83.)

42. Ships sailing free and closehauled—Ships approaching each other in parallel lines—Foreign and British ships.—When a foreign ship meets a British ship out of British waters, the rule of the sea governs their conduct, and that rule is that, when two vessels are approaching each other nearly on the same course and both have the wind free, each vessel is bound to port her helm and run to starboard of the other; but if one vessel is closehauled, the running ship, that is, the ship which has the wind free, is bound to make way for the close-hauled ship: (The Chancellor, J. C. P. C. March 13, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 100, reversing decree of A. C.)

43. British ship closehauled meeting steamer—Merchant Shipping Act 1854 not applicable to foreign ship colliding on the high seas.—Collision between British ship closehauled on port tack and foreign steamer in the Solent. Collision held to have taken place on the high seas, and sects. 296 and 297 of the Merchant Shipping Act not applicable, but the question to be decided by the ordinary rules of the sea: (Case of The Fyenoord, 1 Sw. 374, relied on.) A steamer, as being free, is bound to give way, and vessel closehauled to keep her course. But the latter vessel held in fault for showing no light. Steamer also held in fault for not taking proper measures to avoid collision, and not easing and stopping her engines: (The Eclipse v. The Saxonia, J. C. P. C. Feb. 13, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 192; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 6; 8 Jur. N. S. 315; 31 L. J. 201; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 1, Priv. Co., affirming decree of A. C.)

44. Ships closehauled on port tack—Appeal—Question of seamanship.—Vessel close-hauled on port tack held in fault for wearing instead of tacking when there was not sufficient sea room to wear, and for not afterwards going astern of another vessel close-hauled on the port tack. The latter vessel held to be right in keeping her course and starboarding helm at the last moment to diminish the force of the collision. The Judicial Committee of Privy Council, as observed in the cases of the Julia, 14 Moo. 235, and the Minnehaha, Lush. 335, always feel extreme reluctance to disturb a judgment of the Admiralty Court founded on a question of seamanship: (The Falkland and the Navigator, J. C. P. C. July 31, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 367; 9 Jur. N. S. 1114, reversing judgment of A. C.)

45. Foreign and English steamers meeting each other off the Mouse Light in the Thames—Cases then governed by ordinary rule of the sea—Green and white lights seen.—A collision having occurred between a foreign and an English steamer off the Mouse Light in the Thames: Held, that the statute did not apply, but the case must be governed by the ordinary rule of the sea. The foreign vessel having seen a green and a white light of the other steamer, about half a point on her starboard bow, distant about a mile: Held, in fault for at once porting helm: (The Black Diamond, A. C. Nov. 14, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 399; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396.)

46. Merchant Shipping Act, s. 296—Evidence.—Two vessels approaching in opposite directions nearly end on. Duty in such case prescribed by 296th section of the Merchant Shipping Act. Omission to carry lights. Affirmative and negative evidence. Question as to burden of proof: (The Moderation, J. C. P. C. Dec. 12, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 413; 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 586, affirming decree of A. C.)

XIV. STEAMERS.

47. Steamers meeting—Danger by continuing their courses—Merchant Shipping Act 1854—Appeal—Mistake as to evidence—Costs.—Two steamers meeting each other on opposite courses so as to involve risk of collision by continuing their respective courses, the duty in such case is defined by sect. 296 of the Merchant Shipping Act. It was held that a vessel obeying this statute has a right to trust that the vessel she meets, if a British vessel, will obey it too. Considered that the clause in the Act might be modified with advantage as to cases where each vessel sees the light of the other on the starboard bow. Mistake as to effect of evidence of extreme rarity in Admiralty Court. On appeal, costs not given where appellants might have thought their case was not properly understood in the court below: (The Araxes and the Black Prince, J. C. P. C., Aug. 2, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 130, affirming judgment of A. C.)

48. Narrow channel.—Sect. 297 of Merchant Shipping Act.—Meaning of expression "narrow channel," under sect. 297 of Merchant Shipping Act. What constitutes violation of that section? Case as to carrying lights. Compulsory pilotage: (The Florence Nightingale and the Meander, J. C. P. C., Feb. 2, 1863, affirming judgment of A. C.; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 301; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 400; 9 Jur. N. S. 475. See No. 35, "Pilot on Board.")

49. Ships at anchor—Chain parting—Negligence.—Steamer at single anchor held liable for damage by collision with a schooner at anchor, consequent on the steamer's chain parting, because the latter had veered out her chain till she was too close to the schooner, and delayed taking measures for properly mooring for the night so that the collision became inevitable after the chain parted: (The Egyptian, J. C. P. C. April 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 358; 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776.)

XV. SUITS.

50. Burden of Proof—Ship at anchor.—The burden of proof as to cause of collision with a ship at anchor rests upon the other vessel proceeded against to account for the collision: (The George Arkle, A. C. June 6, 1861; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 154.)

51. Evidence—Consequential damage—Clothes, &c., of crew—Cash in master's hands.—There not being two witnesses to prove a fact, supplementary evidence deemed sufficient to remove this technical objection. Loss of money and valuable articles stolen out of a chest belonging to one of the crew saved from the wreck of the ship after collision recovered against wrongdoer. But consequential damages held not recoverable. Loss of clothes belonging to crew allowed, deducting one third from the first cost, as fixing their estimated market value. Cases of The Gazelle, 2 W. Rob. 279, and The Clyde, 1 Swa. 24, referred to. Decree also for loss of balance of freight, in cash, in master's hands: (The Cumberland, A. C. Ireland, 1860; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 170; 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 496; 5 Ir. Jur. 399.)

52. Arrest of freight—Sum to be paid into court—Deduction from freight—Liability of shipowner for loss of full freight.—The freight of a vessel proceeded against for damage by collision may be arrested in the hands of the owners of the cargo. The sum to be paid into court by them is the amount of freight due to the shipowner, and they were held entitled to deduct interest on half the freight, the consignee's commission, an allowance for non-fulfilment which had become due in terms of the charter-party, and the costs of paying the net balance of freight into court. The liability of the shipowner to the extent of the entire freight held a very different question: (The Leo, A. C. Feb. 26, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 200; 6 L. T. Rep. N. S. 52.)

53. Admiralty Court Act—Jurisdiction—Statute of Richard II.—The Admiralty Court has, by the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Act 1861, jurisdiction in a suit against a steamer for damage done to a barge in the river Thames within the body of a county, the difficulties in this respect created by the words of the statute of Richard II. having been thereby wholly removed. The utmost jurisdiction is now given to the court in cases of collision: (The Malvina, A. C. April 29, 1862, and J. C. P. C., April 13, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 218, and 341.)

53a. Amount sued for insufficient to cover damage.—Where bail had not been given, and the amount sued for upon a bond fide estimate was found not sufficient to cover the actual cost of repairs of damage done by collision, the plaintiff was allowed to increase the amount for which the action was entered: (The Meander, A. C. May 19, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 221.)

54. Counsel's fee to advise—Costs of laying plea before counsel.—Fee to counsel to advise whether a plea should be admitted without opposition or not, and costs of laying the plea before counsel, allowed. This was the ancient practice, but now that the pleadings are simplified, the court felt unable to lay down any general rule for the future whether such expenses should be allowed in certain cases: (The Rover, A. C. May 13 and June 3, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 221.)

55. Limitation of time of appealing from judgment of Admiralty Court—Practice.—An appeal in a cross action was allowed, though not entered within fifteen days from date of decree. The Judicial Committee may grant a relaxation of this limit of time to appeal where justice appears to call for it. The limitation of time is founded on practice, and is not, as is supposed by Lord Stowell in the case of The Sally, 2 Rob. 229, governed by the statutes of Hen. 8. Case of The Illeannon Pirates, 6 Moo. 471, cited: (The Florence Nightingale, J. C. P. C. July 16, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 237.)

56. Jurisdiction of consular courts—Proceedings in rem.—The Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 94, s. 1, and Orders in Council Aug. 27, 1860, has jurisdiction in cases of collision between British and foreign ships within Turkish waters. Origin of such courts as explained by Lord Stowell in the case of The Indian Chief, 4 Rob. . . . Arrest of ships in cases of bottomry being usual before the consular court, held that proceedings in rem are also competent to it in collision cases: (The Laconia, Supreme Consular Court of Constantinople, May 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 252; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 164; The Colchide, J. C. P. C. Aug. 5, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 378.)

57. Jurisdiction—Liability of steam-tug for damage to ship in tow.—On the authority of The Julia, 1 Lush. 224, and even without reference to the Admiralty Court Act 1861, s. 7, the court has jurisdiction in a suit instituted against a steam-tug by a vessel in tow for damage caused by collision through her misconduct between the vessel which she was towing and another vessel: (The Night Watch, A. C. Nov. 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 260; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 396; 8 Jur. N. S. 1161; 32 L. J. 47.)

58. Jurisdiction over collision in Holland canal—Concurrent jurisdiction of other courts.—The Admiralty Court has jurisdiction in a case of collision between an English and an Irish vessel in the Great North Holland Canal. It is not competent to object to the jurisdiction because a court of common law could give a remedy, or because the Dutch courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the Admiralty Court in such a case, and that these courts have a different mode of administering the law. Construction of 7th section of Admiralty Court Act, 24 Vict. c. 10: (The Diana, A. C. Nov. 4, 1862; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 261; 7 L. T. Rep. N. S. 397; 9 Jur. N. S. 26; 32 L. J. 57.)

59. Burden of proof—Duty to stay by ship.—Sect. 33 of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, imposes a burden on two ships when they have been in collision, that the one ship should render such assistance as may be practicable and necessary to the other vessel that has suffered damage by collision, provided such assistance can be given without danger to the vessel affording it. In order to apply this section, it must be clear that there was danger from the collision. When a collision takes place which might probably endanger life, it is the duty of the vessel to stay by till the extent of the danger can be ascertained. The burden of proof is on the party not rendering assistance to show that the collision was not occasioned by his wrongful act, neglect, or default: (The Queen of the Orwell, A. C. Feb. 19, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 300.)

60. Pleadings—Frame of.—Pleadings ought to be so framed that if evidence were taken by an examiner, the pleadings alone would enable him to elicit all the facts of the case: (The Claus Thomeson, A. C. March 24, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 327.)

61. Action in personam at common law after action in rem in Admiralty Court.—A judgment in rem in Admiralty Court and execution by sale of vessel is no bar to an action in personam at common law where damage done is more than the amount realised by such sale. Ancient authorities collected in Com. Dig. tit. "Action," k. 1, cases of The Fortitude, 2 Dod. 58, and The John and Mary, Swab. Ad. Rep. 47; 1 L. T. Rep. N. S. 494, referred to. The Admiralty Court could give a remedy only to the extent of the lien, that is, the value of the ship proceeded against: (Nelson and others v. Couch and others, C. B., June 24, 1863; 1 Mar. Law Cas. 348.)

PRINCIPAL SECRETARY TO THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The return furnished by the Lord Chancellor's principal secretary of the proceedings in his office for the year commencing with the 2nd Nov. 1867 and ending with 1st Nov. 1868 shows in the number of attendable petitions a decrease of 199, as compared with the number for the preceding year, following a decrease of 50 in 1866-7, as compared with 1865-6.

The following are the numbers of attendable petitions under the different descriptions of proceedings in 1867-8:

In causes	610
Under Acts relating to railways and other public works	423
Under the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852	211
Under the Trustee Relief Acts 1847 and 1849	260
Under the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Act	65
Under the Acts relating to charities	2
Under the Winding-up and Joint-Stock Companies Act	116
Under the Infants' Settlement Act 1855	8
In other general matters	141
1866-7	1836

Of the foregoing petitions, as stated in the return, 1428 were on the higher scale of court fees, and 394 on the lower scale, and 14 at fixed fees, or exempt. Of the 2035 petitions in 1866-7, 1522 were on the higher scale, 494 on the lower scale, and 19 fixed or exempt.

There were, further, 19 petitions presented to the Lord Chancellor in 1867-8 for orders of course, against 10 in the preceding year, and 12 in 1858-9. There were six letters missive in 1867-8 against 5 in the preceding year, and 7 in 1858-9. There were 3 warrants, against 7, in 1866-7 and 1 in 1858-9.

Of the petitions presented in 1867-8, 20 were for hearing before the Lord Chancellor, 130 before the Lords Justices, 634 before Vice-Chancellor Malins, 520 before Vice-Chancellor Stuart, and 532 before Vice-Chancellors Wood and Giffard.

The amount of fees collected in the office by means of stamps was 1531*l.*, against 1651*l.* in the preceding year, and 1528*l.* in 1858-9. Of the amount collected in 1867-8, 1428*l.* was on the higher scale, 98*l.* 10*s.* on the lower scale, and 4*l.* 10*s.* fixed.

PRINCIPAL SECRETARY AT THE ROLLS.—The return furnished by the Secretary of Decrees and Causes at the Rolls shows the proceedings in the office of the Secretary of the Rolls for the year commencing the 2nd Nov. 1867, and ending the 1st Nov. 1868. In the number of petitions set down for hearing there is a decrease of 142, as compared with the number for the year 1866-7, following a decrease of 239 in the latter year as compared with the number for 1865-6, the number for 1867-8 being also less by 136 than the number for 1858-9.

The following table shows the number of petitions set down for hearing at the Rolls, under the different matters to which they relate:

In causes	257
In the Acts relating to Public Charities	3
In the Trustee Acts	47
In the Trustee Relief Acts	82
In the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates Acts	25
In the Acts relating to Railways and other Public Works	109
In the Winding-up and Joint Stock Companies Act	62
In the Infants' Settlement Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 43)	12
In other matters	14

Of the 611 petitions set down for hearing in 1867-8, 540, or 88·4 per cent., were on the higher scale, and 71, or 11·6 per cent., on the lower scale. In the preceding year the proportion was 86·1 per cent. on the higher scale, and 13·9 per cent. on the lower.

There were further, in 1867-8, 4033 petitions presented for orders of course, and orders of course drawn up, of which 3853, or 95·5 per cent. were on the higher scale, and 180, or 4·5 per cent., on the lower. In the preceding year the number of petitions for orders of course, and orders of course drawn up, was 4139, of which 3944, or 92·3 per cent. were on the higher scale, and 195, or 4·7 per cent. on the lower scale.

The total amount of fees collected in the office of the Secretary of the Rolls in 1867-8, the amounts at the different rates being distinguished in the return, was 2140*l.*, against 2461*l.* in the preceding year, and 2199*l.* in 1858-9.

The business transacted for which no fees are now payable is shown in the returns, and was as follows:

Caveats	79
Docquets	49
Recognisances vacated	68
Fiats upon certificates of aliens	328
Fiats upon deeds for enrolment	48
Office copies	136
Deeds, &c., for enrolment	—

EXAMINERS' RETURN.—The return furnished by the Examiners of the High Court of Chancery shows the proceedings in their office for the year ending 2nd Nov. 1868. The number of witnesses examined by the examiners (the evidence in proceedings in Chancery not being taken orally in court), and the amount of fees received during the year, with the number and amounts for the preceding year and for the years 1858-9, were as follows:

	1867-8.	1866-7.	1858-9.
Number of witnesses examined	534	431	456
Amount of fees received (by stamps)	£314	£270	£233

TAXING MASTERS' RETURNS.—The returns furnished by the Taxing Master of the High Court of Chancery show the number of orders and references for taxation brought into the respective offices, the number of bills taxed, and the number of certificates and allocators made by each taxing master. They show also the amount of fees and the amount of costs, distinguishing the amounts on the lower and on the higher scales.

The following are the totals of the proceedings under the different headings in the offices of the seven taxing masters:

	Orders and References for Taxation.	Bills Taxed.	Certificates and Allocators made.
General business	3443	6892	2957
Taxations under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 75, and under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845	217	432	129
Taxations in Lunacy	222	372	205
Taxations under requests from officers of other courts	105	186	65
Total proceedings	3887	7882	3356

The total proceedings show an increase in 1867-8 of 205, or 5·5 per cent., in the number of orders and references for taxation; of 545, or 7·4 per cent., in the number of bills taxed; and of 194, or 6·1 per cent., in the number of certificates and allocators made above the numbers for 1866-7, the numbers for 1866-7 having exceeded the numbers for 1865-6 by 213, or 6·1 per cent., under the first head, by 445, or 6·5 per cent., under the second, and by 173, or 5·7 per cent., under the third.

As compared with the numbers for 1858-9, the numbers for 1867-8 show an increase of 525, or 15·6 per cent., under the first head, of 230, or 3·0 per cent., under the second, and of 401, or 13·5 per cent., under the third.

The amount of fees in the taxing master's office in the year ending 1st Nov. 1868 was 26,509l. 19s. 6d., of which 1827l. 11s. 6d. was on the lower scale, and 24,682l. 8s. on the higher scale. In the preceding year the total amount of fees was 24,841l. 19s. 6d., of which 1631l. 5s. 6d. was on the lower scale, and 23,210l. 14s. on the higher, showing an increase in 1867-8, in the total amount, 1668l., or 6·7 per cent., following an increase of 928l. 2s., or nearly 4 per cent., in the amount for 1866-7, as compared with the amount for 1865-6. For 1858-9 the fees amounted to 1747l. 1s. 6d. on the lower scale, and 21,929l. 12s. 6d. on the higher scale, making a total of 26,376l. 14s., or less than the total for 1867-8 by 2331l. 5s. 6d., or nearly 11·0 per cent.

The amount of costs taxed was 872,388l. 19s. 6d., of which 52,703l. 9s. was on the lower scale, and 819,685l. 10s. 6d. on the higher scale. In the preceding year the total amount was 815,450l. 5s. 4d., of which 46,216l. 0s. 3d. was on the lower scale, and 769,234l. 5s. 1d. on the higher scale; showing an increase in 1867-8 in the total amount of 56,938l. 14s. 2d., or nearly 7·0 per cent. The amount in 1858-9 was 794,456l. 7s. 8d., of which 49,845l. 8s. 8d. was on the lower scale, and 744,610l. 19s. on the higher scale; the total amount being less than the total for 1867-8 by 77,321l. 11s. 10d., or nearly 9·0 per cent.

MASTERS IN LUNACY.—The statistics of the duties performed in the office of the Masters in Lunacy during the year from 2nd Nov. 1867 to 1st Nov. 1868, inclusive, are shown in the return furnished by the chief clerk to the Masters in Lunacy, in the same form as for preceding years. The number of the proceedings under each head, with the amounts of cash, &c., as shown in the return for 1867-8, is as follows:—

Orders of inquiry in Commissions in Lunacy, executed by Masters in Lunacy	76
Reports made to the Lord Chancellor	182
Bonds and recognisances taken as security for lunatics' estates	102
Certificates as to such securities	110
Certificates for investment of cash already in court belonging to lunatics	3
Certificates for payment of money, transfer of stock into court, investment of cash in court, &c.	196
Amount of cash included in such last-mentioned certificates	£222,732
Amount of stock included in such certificates	£10,035
Amount of cash already in court directed to be invested	£3,587
Certificates other than as above	203
Accounts and affidavits of committees and receivers of lunatics' estates taken and passed by the masters	348
Leases and other deeds settled and approved	179
Summonses for proceedings before the masters	5,119
Amount of receipts in the accounts and affidavits of committees and receivers in lunacy passed during the year	£586,124
Amount of disbursements and allowances therein	£509,101

The reports made to the Lord Chancellor by the Masters in Lunacy are stated in the return to comprise, amongst other matters, reports as to the property, kindred, and maintenance of the lunatics and their families, and the appointment of committees of their persons and estates; reports approving new committees of person or estate; reports fixing anew, or in any way varying, the maintenance or residence of the lunatics; reports as to granting leases and providing for the repair of the lunatics' estates; reports on miscellaneous matters. The certificates, other than as to securities, and the investment and payment of cash, relate to the deposit and delivery out of deeds, wills, and other documents, the approval and allowance of leases, deeds, and various other matters incidental to the management of lunatics' estates. The accounts and affidavits of committees and receivers taken and passed by the masters are stated to be exclusive of cases in which the masters have been satisfied as to the due application of the incomes of lunatics by other evidence or explanation.

REGISTRAR IN LUNACY.—In the return furnished by the Registrar in Lunacy for the year ending 1st November 1868, the proceedings in his office are shown under the same heads as in the returns for the preceding years.

The following are the numbers of the proceedings under each head, and the amounts of cash and stock as shown in the return for 1867-8:

Petitions presented for hearing	138
---------------------------------------	-----

Orders made for inquiry (Commissions of Lunacy)	86
Other orders, including flats confirming Master's reports	294
Number of orders made in pursuance of the Lunacy Regulation Act 1862, for the application of properties of small amount for the maintenance of lunatics	40
Certificates of Costs filed	191
Certificates of the Master in Lunacy filed	464
Affidavits filed	1,280
Amount of cash directed to be paid into court	£52,535
ditto	£13,889
Amount of stock directed to be transferred into court	£196,814
ditto	£164,143
Amount of stock directed by orders in lunacy to be transferred otherwise than into court	£165,417

The Registrar appends to his return the observation that the amount of cash directed to be paid into court by the orders does not include the balances paid in by committees nor any of the sums of money paid in by debtors, purchasers, and others, when the amounts are not mentioned in the orders, but have to be afterwards ascertained and verified by affidavit; and that the amounts paid out do not include the payments out of the dividends to committees for maintenance, nor the amounts paid for costs, such amounts not being mentioned in the orders.

SAYINGS AND DOINGS OF THE COURTS.

[CONTRIBUTED BY THE REPORTERS OF THE SEVERAL COURTS.]

COURT OF ARCHES.

On Tuesday last the case of Sheppard v. Rev. W. J. E. Bennett, came before Sir Robert Phillimore on the admission of the articles containing the charges of alleged heresy. An application for admission of the articles was made some days back, when certain amendments were suggested by the court. The defendant, when called, did not appear, and the court remarked on the inconvenience caused by the defendant's persistence in not appearing in the cause. The letters of request were set out at length in the report of the case in the Court of Arches on the preliminary question of the acceptance of the letters of request (20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 623). The letters contained passages from the defendant's works, viz., the essay in "the Church and the World," entitled "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833," and the "Plea for Toleration in the Church of England," and a statement of the proceedings before the commission of inquiry. The articles expanded the nature of the charge by further reference to the defendant's books. The amendments suggested by Sir Robert Phillimore were chiefly that certain references, in the passages quoted from the defendant's books, to the opinions of Drs. Pusey and Newman, and other clergymen, and certain needless statements in the account of the proceedings of the commission of inquiry, should be omitted from the articles, and further, that the alleged heretical passages in the articles should be those only which were set out in the letters of request. Mr. A. J. Stephens, Q. C., Dr. Tristram, Mr. Archibald, and Mr. Shaw, now appeared on behalf of the promoters to urge the admission of the articles without the amendments proposed. After their arguments, Sir Robert Phillimore reserved judgment. His Lordship will probably give his decision in a few days, since, according to present arrangements, the cause stands for hearing on Nov. 10.

ELECTION LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

ELECTION PETITION—SECOND PETITION.—A petition was presented against the return of C., claiming the seat for J., and on the hearing C. was unseated and J. declared to have been duly elected. A petition was then presented against the return of J., alleging that he was incapacitated to be returned by reason of bribery. Held, that such a petition would not lie, inasmuch as the objection to J. might have been raised at the trial of his petition against C.: (Tannton Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 202. C. P.)

BRIBERY BY CHARITABLE GIFTS—INTIMIDATION BY A VIGILANCE COMMITTEE—ACTS NOT AFFECTING THE ELECTION.—A member was in the habit of sending down to his agent annually a sum of 250l. to be distributed in Christmas gifts. He gave no directions as to how it should be expended, and made no inquiries. Held, that the giving of Christmas gifts was not a matter to avoid the election, unless it was shown that the gifts dispensed by a responsible agent had influenced votes. Where there is some evidence of intimidation, in considering whether the freedom of election has been so interfered with as to affect its validity, the extent of the majority obtained by the sitting members must be considered. A member is responsible for the act of an agent done contrary to instructions, but if the agent treacherously or traitorously agrees with the other side, then if he does a corrupt act it would not vacate the seat unless it is proved that the corrupt act was at the especial request of the member himself or that some untainted and authorised agent of the member directed the act to be done. But the seat would be affected if a man being an agent is tricked by the other party into committing a corrupt act, he himself honestly still intending to act as agent. It was shown that committees were formed, having at their heads paid agents for the purpose of getting the men together, so that they might be corrupted at any moment at which it might become necessary. It was not proved that "the tip" to vote was given, but it was proved that several of the voters so collected together did not vote for the other side. Further, the names of many voters were written by an agent upon a card, and it was held, that the proceedings of these organisations and of the agents amounted to bribery. An agent of the sitting member organised a vigilance committee for the purpose of detecting bribery on the other side, and in a public speech exhorted his audience not to allow their voters to vote. This advice was followed on the following day. Held, intimidation for which the member was responsible. Semble, it is illegal to employ a number of persons to actively search for corrupt practices on the part of opponents, and if they use violence in so doing it will amount to intimidation. There being cross petitions, and each side having failed in part and succeeded in part. Held, that they should bear their own costs: (Stafford Borough Election Petition, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 210. Blackburn, J.)

JUDGES' CHAMBERS.

Thursday, Oct. 28.

(Before HAYES, J.)

The Beverley Commission.

To-day was appointed by Mr. Justice Hayes to give his judgment on an application made by Mr. Morgan Howard yesterday for a writ of habeas corpus, to procure the release from York Castle of Flint and Fitzgerald, the two witnesses who refused to be sworn. The point was that on the 27th Sept. only two of the commissioners, the third being absent, adjourned the sittings. On the 19th Oct. inst. the sittings were resumed before the three commissioners; and, on the 21st inst., Flint and Fitzgerald were committed to York Castle for declining to be sworn. It was contended that the commission had ended by the adjournment, and could not legally be continued on the 19th inst., and therefore the three commissioners had no power to commit the parties on the 21st inst. The point was said to be of considerable public importance, and the writ could be made returnable to be argued at the commencement of term in the Court of Queen's Bench.

HAYES, J. said he was of opinion that the writs should be issued, and under the Act 56 Geo. 3 he should make them returnable in court. As the men were in prison, the question should come on early before the court.

F. Blake asked for the return of the two writs to be on the first day of the term. The question was very important.

HAYES, J. made the return for the second day, Wednesday, when the question would be argued before the court.

Correspondence.

PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS ACT 1869.—By sect. 45 of the Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125 it is enacted that any person other than a candidate found guilty in any proceedings, who, after notice of the charge has had an opportunity of being heard, shall during the seven years next after the time of his being found guilty be incapable of, amongst other things, holding any office under the Municipal Corporation Act. Does this apply to a person who has been examined before an election commission, and who has acknowledged himself guilty of bribery and other corrupt practices at the last election, 1868, and who obtained a certificate, or to a person formally tried before a judge of assize. TOWN COUNCILLOR.

DISFRANCHISEMENT OF CORRUPT VOTERS.—The revising barrister for Reigate has struck out the whole of the claimants who appeared in the report of the Parliamentary Commissioners appointed to inquire into corrupt practices in the borough of Reigate (1866) to have been bribed. The mayor, who said he was personally interested in the decision, contended that the revising barrister was exceeding his authority. The latter intimated his willingness to grant a special case for the Queen's Bench.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

NONSUIT.—The modern rule as to nonsuit is that in every case before the evidence is left to the jury there is a preliminary question for the judge, not whether there is literally no evidence, but whether there is any upon which a jury can properly find a verdict for the party producing it, upon whom the onus of proof is imposed. A nonsuit may be directed even after the defendant has entered on his case, and evidence given by the latter may be used for the purpose of a nonsuit: (Giblen v. McMullen, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 214. P. C.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE—AGREEMENT TO LIVE SEPARATE—DESERTION.—Where a wife has agreed, on condition of the payment of a sum of money, not to insist on cohabitation, though she had afterwards presented a petition for restitution of conjugal rights, which she did not prosecute: The court held, that as the wife had agreed to live separate from her husband, and cohabitation had never been actually resumed, the husband had not been guilty of desertion: (Buckmaster v. Buckmaster, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 231. Div.)

LONGFORD QUARTER SESSIONS.

Wednesday, Oct. 20.

IN INSOLVENCY.

(Before CHARLES KELLY, Esq., Q. C., Chairman.)
Re THOMAS FERRALL, an Insolvent.

Indebtedness for damages in an action for malicious prosecution—Evidence of malice—Absence of opposing creditor.

Where an action is brought in a Civil Bill Court for a malicious prosecution, and a decree for 20l. obtained, when the defendant comes up to be discharged as an insolvent, the court will take the decree as evidence of the malice, but will allow the insolvent to go into a case of mitigation. The absence of the opposing creditor is no bar to the case being proceeded with.

The insolvent was opposed by Reynolds, solicitor, on the ground of having been in custody for a debt contracted by an action for a malicious prosecution and for suppression of property.

Levy, for the insolvent, asked if the opposing creditor who was also the detaining creditor, were in attendance; and, being answered in the negative, he objected to the case being proceeded with in his absence. He admitted the decree was prima facie evidence of the malice, but he was entitled to go into a case of mitigation, which he could not do without having the opposing creditor there for cross-examination.

The CHAIRMAN said it would be more satisfactory if he were there, but he would permit the case to go on in his absence. He would, however, allow the insolvent to go into a case of mitigation if he could.

Levy said that made it absolutely necessary to have the opposing creditor there, and he asked the court to adjourn the case to next sessions, so as to have him present.

The CHAIRMAN said if he adjourned it, he would keep the insolvent in prison in the meantime.

The insolvent was then called up and examined, when it appeared that a sum of 80l., which he got as a marriage portion within the period which he purported to account for, was wholly omitted from the schedule. The petition was dismissed on the ground of suppression of property.

A judgment-debt in the Common Pleas for 1500l. due from the Earl of Westmorland and Sir Reginald Henry Graham, Bart., is announced for sale by Auction on Friday, the 5th Nov.

Mr. John Turner Rawlinson, a solicitor, for many year political agent of the Conservative party in Horsham, was attacked with a fit of apoplexy whilst dressing, and died almost immediately.

The gentleman who was killed while walking on the North-Eastern Railway near Scarborough, was, it appears, Mr. Henry Wright Porter, of St. Thomas's-street, Southwark, who has for some years had the management of the law business of the South Eastern Railway Company, in relation to their land sales and purchases, and construction of new railways. An inquest was held on the body, and a verdict of "Accidental Death," returned.

MICHAELMAS TERM.—On the termination of the Long Vacation, the lists of arrears in the Common Law Courts were exhibited for the ensuing Michaelmas Term, commencing on Tuesday next, the 2nd proximo. In the Queen's Bench there are 37 cases in the new trial paper for argument, and in the special paper 4 rules for judgment and 46 for argument, besides 4 enlarged rules. At the Court of Common Pleas there are in the remanet paper 7 new trial rules, 1 enlarged rule, and 2 cases for judgment. In the special paper there are 40 matters entered. In the Exchequer, of errors and appeals there are 4 for argument and 1 for judgment. There are 2 rules in the special paper for judgment, and 12 for argument, while of new trials, 2 for judgment and 6 for argument.

THE BENCH AND THE BAR.

Mr. Morgan O'Connell has resigned the office of Registrar of Deeds in Dublin, and Mr. Michael F. Dwyer, barrister-at-law, has been appointed in his room.

The Standard states that Mr. Morgan Howard, who contested Lambeth at the general election, will be the Conservative candidate for Southwark.

The Chancery long vacation terminated on Thursday, and on Friday the chambers of the chief clerks re-opened, and the three chief clerks at the four Chancery chambers took their own sumpsonses.

On Tuesday next the Judges, Queen's counsel, and other legal personages will assemble at the mansion of the Lord Chancellor in Great George-street, Westminster, and the procession will be a very short one to Westminster Hall. Before the reception the Common Law Judges will, according to custom, appoint the sittings of the Central Criminal Court for the ensuing year at the Old Bailey.

THE MASTER OF THE TEMPLE.—The Master of the Temple (Dr. Vaughan) will read the Greek Testament each day, except Saturday and Sunday, during the law term, beginning on Tuesday, the 2nd Nov., in the lecture-room under the library of the Middle Temple, at eight o'clock a.m. Any graduates, whether laymen or clergymen, will be admitted if their names are sent to Dr. Vaughan beforehand by letter. The subject for this term will be the Epistle to the Colossians.

LORD ELDON'S DESCENDANT.—On the 21st inst. the young Earl of Eldon, great-grandson of the celebrated Lord Chancellor Eldon, whose title he bears, and whose princely estates he now owns in Durham, Gloucester, and Northumberland, including also his valuable property in the Isle of Purbeck and Wareham, Dorsetshire, which latter is his favourite property, presided at a public dinner held at the Red Lion Hotel, Wareham, of an entirely anti-political and benevolent character. His Lordship, who is much beloved in this part of the country, was supported by some of the chief of the élite of Dorset, including the Welds of Lutworth Castle, Mr. Farrer, of Benegar Hall near Wareham, Recorder of that town; Mr. Bond, of Grange, a nephew of the Right Hon. N. Bond, deceased, who at one time was Judge-Advocate General; Mr. Calcraft, of Rempstone-hall, Wareham; Mr. Freeland Filliter, town clerk and ex-mayor of Wareham, and several other legal and clerical gentlemen. His Lordship presided with much tact, courtesy, and ability, and was very enthusiastically received by the numerous and highly respectable party gathered together to meet him. The occasion was one on which the young earl, just married, made his début as a chairman at a public meeting, and was one of very great interest to all about here.

THE DEPUTY-RECORDER OF GREAT YARMOUTH ON HABITUAL CRIMINALS.—The Deputy Recorder of Great Yarmouth, J. H. Mills, Esq., spoke as follows in his recent charge to the jury. After referring to the light state of the calendar, the learned gentleman said: "Since the last session two important Acts had been passed which could not but have had a very great effect in strengthening the criminal proceedings in this country. The first and most important was the Beerhouses Act, under which no licence could be obtained without a certificate from the magistrates." The learned Deputy-Recorder having epitomised the chief features of the Act, continued: "Such a law must assist materially in regulating the conduct of public-houses and diminishing crime, though he could have wished to have had a clause inserted for the severer punishment of drunkenness. After two summary convictions for drunkenness, he would have the offender the third time indicted for a misdemeanour, and subjected to a term of imprisonment not exceeding three months. This, he believed, would prove an effectual cure for drunkenness, which, independent of the misery it produced to the individual and those connected with him, sometimes led to the greatest crimes known to the law. With regard to the Habitual Criminals Act, he expressed his strong approval of the clauses providing for the registration of criminals and the supervision of the police. The section having reference to marine store dealers ought to be especially read in Yarmouth, as he had had several cases before him of stolen property finding its way to these receiving houses. He hoped these two important statutes would have a beneficial effect upon the country. Another question which was now being taken up was education. He would prefer leaving it to wiser heads than his to determine whether it should be compulsory or not, but he quite agreed with Canon Kingsley, that if the father or mother of a child did not take proper care to educate it, it was the duty of the State to step in, and render its education compulsory. It was altogether useless to pass Acts of Parliament unless you raised the social position of the people. Now that could be effected only by education. It was to be regretted that there could not be an education of all classes irrespective of creeds, as it could be thoroughly carried out by State aid; but unfortunately the heads of religious parties were all anxious to have their respective creeds maintained, and perhaps they were right, but surely they might agree on some common form of prayers to be offered up to the Deity on the opening of school during the week days, and set apart Sunday for the teaching of their respective creeds."

MAGISTRATE AND PARISH LAWYER.

READINGS OF RECENT DECISIONS.

BAKERS—SELLING BY WEIGHT—WEIGHING BREAD BEFORE SALE—FANCY BREAD—6 & 7 WILL. 4, c. 37, s. 4.—The uncertainty which has long existed in the public mind as to the rights of the subject and the duties of the baker with reference to the sale of bread, combined with the vast popularity of the questions involved, induce us to call attention to the law so far as it has been expounded by recent decisions of the courts. By the 4th section of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37 (the Bread Act) it is enacted that, "From and after the commencement of this Act all bread sold beyond the limits aforesaid" (the metropolis) "shall be sold by the several bakers or sellers of bread respectively beyond the said limits by weight; and in case any baker or seller of bread beyond the limits aforesaid shall sell or cause to be sold bread in any other manner than by weight, then and in such case every such baker or seller of bread shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s., which the magistrate or magistrates, justice or justices, before whom such offender or offenders shall be convicted shall order and direct. Provided always that nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent or hinder any such baker or seller of bread from selling bread usually sold under the denomination of French or fancy bread or rolls without previously weighing the same."

The first case that came before the court is that of Jones (app.) v. Huxtable (resp.), 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 381, which was an appeal against a conviction by justices for selling bread otherwise than by weight. It appeared that one Thomas Williams went to the shop of the appellant (a baker) and asked for a quartern set loaf of bread, and, paying 7½d. for it, received a loaf of bread from the shopman; that such loaf was not weighed by the shopman, and that upon its being weighed by the respondent after it was so bought, it was found to be 2oz. 9drs. short of 4lb., the recognised weight of a quartern loaf. Before the justices it was contended that although the loaf was not weighed at the time of sale, yet the dough for the loaves had been weighed before being put into the oven and due allowance had been made for the loss in weight in the process of baking; and it was given in evidence that from the time of baking bread gradually decreases in weight. The court affirmed the conviction. Blackburn, J., in giving judgment, said, "In this case it is clear that the bread was not weighed at the time of the sale, nor was any statement made as to the quantity of bread contained in the loaf, but a sum was charged for a certain description of loaf which is generally understood and taken to weigh 4lb. It further appears that it was the custom of the appellant to weigh the dough for each of these quartern loaves previous to baking, and in doing so, to make allowance for the loss of weight caused by the process of baking, but that subsequent to the baking no trouble whatever was taken to ascertain the weight of the loaves which appears to have been taken for granted. It seems to me, therefore, that under the circumstances the sale of this particular loaf was not by weight but by denomination, and therefore contrary to the statute." So, too, Lush, J. said, "The practice of the appellant as proved, was to weigh the dough previous to baking, but to do nothing to ascertain the weight of the loaf when baked, which should have been 4lb., and inasmuch as a quartern loaf under certain circumstances will sometimes, as he himself shows, lose as much as two ounces or even more in twenty-four hours, it becomes the more necessary, in justice to the purchaser, that the weight should be duly ascertained at the time of the purchase. When, therefore, as in the present instance, a baker sells that which he represents to be a quartern loaf of 4lb., the weight of which nevertheless he does not know and has taken no pains to ascertain, it is clear he sells by denomination and not by weight as required by the statute."

The next case is that of Williams (app.) v. Deggan (resp.), 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 492. In this case the facts were the following: One, S. J., had gone into the shop of the appellant who was a baker, and asked him for a quartern loaf; the appellant, thereupon, handed her a loaf of bread and charged her 7d. for it, which she paid; but he did not weigh the loaf, nor did she request that he would weigh it. The loaf weighed 3lb. 11oz. For the appellant, it was contended that it was not necessary under the statute that the bread should be weighed in the presence of the customer. To this Cockburn, C.J. observed, "It is not necessary to decide that now, for it is clear that there was no evidence that the bread had been weighed at any time," and in giving judgment he said, "To sell bread by weight, it must be weighed, and here there was no evidence that it ever was weighed."

The two foregoing cases clearly establish that bread (unless it be sold as French or fancy bread, of which presently) must be weighed before it is sold, and that weighing the dough before it is baked is not sufficient, and that it is upon the baker to prove that it has in fact been weighed. As to whether or not it is necessary that the bread should be weighed, whether so required to be weighed or not, in the presence of the customer, we shall consider hereafter.

The next case upon the subject is that of Reg. v. Wood, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 654, which turned upon the effect of the proviso in the section "that nothing in this Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prevent or hinder any such baker or seller of bread from selling bread usually sold under the denomination of French or fancy bread, or rolls, without previously weighing the same." In this case the justices found as a fact that the loaf of bread was sold otherwise than by weight, such loaf of bread not being such as, at the time of sale, is usually sold under the denomination of French or fancy bread. The justices also found as a fact that at the time of the passing of the Act (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37), such bread was usually sold under the denomination of fancy bread. They convicted the appellant of the offence of selling bread otherwise than by weight, and the question was whether the loaf, being fancy bread at the time of the passing of the Act, though not such at the time of the conviction, such conviction was correct? A majority of the court (Queen's Bench) held that the justices were correct in their construction of the statute.

The next and last case upon the subject is that of Reg. v. Kennett and Saunders, 20 L. T. Rep. N. S. 655. Both the defendants (appellants) were bakers, and it was proved in the case of Kennett that one Henry Hawkins, a policeman, went to her shop and asked for a 4lb. loaf, which was handed to him across the counter. It was not weighed, and no request was made that it should be weighed. The loaf was carried away and weighed, and found to be 6oz. 4drs. deficient in weight. In the case of Saunders it was proved that the said officer went to her shop and asked for a 2lb. loaf, which was also supplied to him across the counter, which also was not weighed, no request having been made for the purpose, and this loaf was found to be 1oz. 13drs. deficient in weight. It was contended before the justices that the bread in question was within the proviso of the section as being "fancy bread," and it was proved that such loaves were made of the same materials as household or batch bread, but were made up and baked separately from other loaves, and not in batches; that loaves baked separately undergo a greater diminution in weight than loaves baked in batches by reason of the increase of the evaporation; that they become entirely crusty, and assume a different form and solidity from ordinary batch bread. It was also proved that a loaf baked separately was sometimes called a crusty loaf and sometimes a fancy loaf, and it was stated by fifteen witnesses, some of whom were bakers and others not, that they had been in the habit of respectively selling and purchasing such loaves by the name of "fancy loaves." In the course of the argument in the court above Cockburn, C.J., said: "The way it strikes me is this. In making what is called a fancy loaf, or, if you like to call it so, a cottage loaf, there is more expense incurred, and so the baker may fairly charge more for it than for the ordinary household bread. The question then arises, when a person goes and asks for a 4lb. loaf, does not that indicate that he requires a loaf weighing that weight? Here the baker gives a loaf weighing less than 4lb., without saying that it weighs less. If he has not got any more household bread should he not say, 'I can't let you have it, but if you want bread you must take a cottage loaf?' Mellor, J. also said, "I think the baker may well sell those loaves" (cottage loaves) "as fancy bread, for it is just that he should not be a loser by the mode of baking; but he should declare at the time that they are fancy bread." Cockburn, C. J., in addition, during the argument, said, "What the statute intended was, to make a distinction between the two descriptions of bread, and although the bread which is sold to-day as fancy bread, may not be what it was at the time the statute passed, yet if it is now of a fancy character, and differently baked, it is still fancy bread." The court having taken time to consider their judgment, it was ultimately pronounced by Cockburn, C. J., who said, "It does not appear to us necessary to go into the distinction between common bread—the ordinary bread—and fancy bread in this case. The facts were that in both cases the party applying to purchase bread asked for bread by weight; in one case for a 4lb. loaf, and in the other case for a 2lb. loaf. The loaves were delivered as such, and, being taken away and afterwards weighed, in each instance it turned out that they were substantially deficient in weight. We think when a customer asks for bread by weight, that clearly is a case in which, whether the baker choose to give him ordinary bread or fancy bread, he is bound to weigh it. Under the circumstances, we by no means say that he was bound to weigh in the presence of the customer; but he was bound to weigh the bread at some time or other before he sold it, and to sell it by weight instead of by denomination. We think, therefore, having been bound to sell by weight, and the loaves having turned out to be deficient in weight, we must take it that they had never been weighed. We think the magistrates were warranted in coming to the conclusion that the bread had never been weighed. That being so, we are of opinion that the baker ought to have sold by weight, and not having sold by weight, the case is within the statute, and the conviction is right."

The law as laid down in the foregoing cases may thus be stated: First, it is the duty of the baker to weigh, before sale, all bread which is required to be sold by weight—that is, all bread which is not within the proviso of the section as being French, or fancy bread, or rolls, and this he must do after the bread is baked, it not being sufficient that he should weigh the dough before it is baked; secondly, it is not necessary that the bread should be weighed in the presence of the customer unless it is so required to be weighed; thirdly, if a customer asks for ordinary bread such as a 4lb. or 2lb. loaf, or a quartern or half quartern loaf, the baker cannot by supplying him with a fancy loaf, protect himself from the obligation of weighing it, but if he has only fancy bread he should so inform the customer so as to give him the option of taking it as fancy bread; fourthly, that "fancy bread" is such bread as is considered to be such by the trade and the public at the present day, and not such as it was so considered at the time of the passing of the statute, and that such fancy bread if sold as such, need not be previously weighed.

The course to be adopted by a baker upon the sale of his bread is obvious. After the bread is baked he should cause each individual loaf to be weighed, and he should purport to sell it by weight, designating the bread as a 4lb. or 2lb. loaf, or of other weight as the case may be. It may be observed that no penalty attaches under the Act, even if the bread be not of full weight. If the baker knowingly and fraudulently sells bread as of a certain weight when it is not of that weight, he may be liable to an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences, but he is not liable to a summary conviction under the before-mentioned statute. If he has only fancy bread, and yet is asked for the ordinary bread, or for bread without any designation, he should inform the customer that he has only fancy bread, and that that is the only bread with which he can serve him. If the customer then chooses to take such bread, no penalty will attach on account of its not having been weighed. By observing these precautions the baker will effectually steer clear of the difficulties by which he is beset.

THE BEERHOUSE ACT.

GREAT difficulties in the operation of this Act have arisen from the different practice in the metropolis and in the country as to the time of holding the licensing meetings; in the former, March being the licensing month, and in the latter a later date. The Bill as drawn had regard to the provincial licences only, but on notification of the difference in the metropolis, a clause was introduced, providing for it. Unfortunately, in this as in other cases, the other provisions of the Bill were not modified so as to meet the special requisitions of the Metropolitan clause, and, as a consequence of this, many parts of the Act are contradictory and impossible of application to the circumstances of the metropolis. For the purpose of considering these difficulties and determining upon the adoption of some uniform practice throughout London, a meeting of the chairmen of the various divisions was held on Monday, when a communication from the Home Office was read, stating that the Inland Revenue Board were desirous to assist the magistrates by any means in their power in carrying out what were the manifest intentions of the Legislature. The following is a report of the proceedings:—

John Fish Pownall, Esq., was unanimously elected chairman.

Mr. Francis attended the meeting at the request of the chairman, and read the correspondence between the chairman of the court and the Home Office on the subject of the transfer of the existing excise licences to new tenants before the first meeting of magistrates to grant certificates.

The chairman called attention to the provisions of the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, authorising the granting of certificates for licences by justices in their several special sessions divisions, in the following cases, viz.:—

1. To sell beer and cider to be drunk or consumed on the premises.
2. To sell beer and cider not to be drunk or consumed in the house or on the premises specified in the licence.
3. To sell table beer at a price not exceeding 1½d. the quart, and not to be drunk or consumed on the premises where sold.
4. To persons who shall have taken out a licence to sell strong beer in casks, containing not less than four and a half gallons, or in not less than two dozen quart bottles at one time, to be drunk or consumed elsewhere than on the premises; an additional licence to sell beer in any less quantity and in any other manner than as aforesaid, but not to be drunk or consumed on the premises where sold. Such additional licence to be granted without the production of any certificate, or the possession of any other qualification than the licence first mentioned.
5. To any person who shall keep a shop for the sale of any goods or commodities other than foreign wine, or who shall have taken out a licence as a dealer in wine, a licence to sell by retail and in reputed quart or pint bottles: only in such shop foreign wine not to be consumed on the premises where sold.
6. To any person licensed to keep a refreshment house, a licence to sell foreign wine by retail in such refreshment house, to be consumed on the premises, where the same shall have been sold without producing or having any other licence or authority as aforesaid.

On the motion of F. H. N. Glossop, Esq., which was duly seconded, it was resolved:—"That as to new tenants of premises for which a licence under the three Acts first mentioned in the Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869, was in force at the time of the passing of that Act, it is expedient to grant certificates by way of transfer in the same manner in all respects as if a certificate had been granted at the last general annual licensing meeting."

Resolved:—"That it is expedient that applications for certificates for new licences, and for transfers to new tenants, be made in writing, stating the description of licence required, and left at the office of the clerk to the justices fourteen days before the general annual licensing meeting, or the transfer meeting, as the case may be."

COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL.

FELONS' GOODS.

Mr. Bontems brought up a report of a committee giving effect to a resolution of the court passed in May last, that from and after the expiration of the then shrievalty, the practice of allowing the sheriffs to receive and retain felons' goods, fines, and forfeitures be discontinued, and that the city bailiffs collect all such goods, fines, and forfeitures, and pay the same into the chamber of the corporation, to abide the order of the court.

The report led to a short discussion, in the course of which Mr. Deputy De Jersey, who had himself acted as under-sheriff, pointed out that the office involved considerable anxiety and responsibility in disposing of the proceeds of felons' goods among their poor relatives, and that it was only the surplus remaining after such disposal that went into the pockets of the under-sheriffs. The under-sheriffs, he said, had no salaries, but had, notwithstanding, serious liabilities attached to their position, which did not always cease with the expiration of their year of office; and he argued that if the corporation took from them the fines and forfeitures it ought to relieve them of those liabilities.

He was followed by Sir Sydney Waterlow, who supported the proposed change, speaking from his experience of the office of sheriff a few years ago, both in the interest of prisoners and their families, and in that of the under-sheriffs. He added that if the report were carried out there might be some arrangement by future sheriffs to remunerate the under-sheriffs in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Bontems, who had brought up the report, remarked that, on consideration of the circumstances, the court would probably in future allow a sum equivalent to the loss by the proposed application of the funds in question to be paid to the under-sheriffs from time to time from the corporation cash.

The report was eventually adopted, and a bill founded upon it was read a first and second time by the court, acting for the time in its legislative capacity.

After transacting some business of little public interest, the court adjourned.

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—NEW COURT.

Tuesday, Oct. 26.

(Before Mr. Commissioner KERR.)

A curious point was raised in this court in connection with a prosecution on the part of the Mint.

Charles Thomas Chandler was indicted for feloniously uttering a counterfeit coin, and pleaded autrefois acquit. It appeared that the day before he was charged with a misdemeanor in having uttered this counterfeit shilling, and the offence was charged as a misdemeanor only, because his alleged accomplice, who was tried with him, had never been before convicted. Both prisoners were acquitted; the woman was discharged, but Chandler was detained, and to-day indicted for felony.

In answer to plea of autrefois acquit Mr. Crauford, M.P., who appeared for the prosecution, stated it was quite true the offence was precisely the same, but that the present indictment charged the previous conviction.

Mr. Commissioner KERR said it might become a case for a court of error, but

Mr. Avery, the Clerk of Arraigns, pointed out that if the prisoner was tried and committed on this indictment, the record would show that he was both convicted and acquitted of the same offence.

The learned COMMISSIONER saw the force of this objection, and ordered the prisoner to be discharged.

SOHAM COUNTY COURT.

Tuesday, Oct. 12.

(Before JOHN COLLYER, Esq., Judge.)

NEATHERCOAT v. ALDERTON.

Friendly society—Reference to arbitration—Jurisdiction of County Court.

Upon an action by a member of a friendly society for arrears of sick pay alleged to be due to him: Held, that as the 69th rule of the society directed the reference of all disputes to arbitration in a manner therein provided, the jurisdiction of the County Court was ousted, notwithstanding that the direction as to the appointment of arbitrators had not been literally complied with. Reg. v. Evans quoted.

This was an action brought by John Neathercoat against Henry Alderton, the secretary of the Sons of Benevolence Lodge of Ancient Shepherds, Isleham, for certain arrears of sick pay alleged to be due to him.

E. Cross for the plaintiffs.

J. W. Cooper for the defendants.

Upon the case being called on in July, His HONOUR said he supposed the contention on the part of the defendant would be that the jurisdiction of the County Court was ousted.

J. W. Cooper.—That is my defence. By the 69th rule of the society, which is certified by Mr. Tidd Pratt as required by law, all disputes are to be referred to arbitration. The rule is as follows:

"That if any dispute shall arise between any member or person claiming under or on account of any member or under the rules of the society, and the trustees, treasurer, or other officers of the society, or the committee thereof, it shall be referred to arbitration. At the second meeting of the society after these rules are certified by the Registrar, five arbitrators shall be named and elected, none of them being directly or indirectly beneficially interested in the funds of the society; and in each case of dispute the names of the arbitrators shall be written on pieces of paper and placed in a box or glass, and the three whose names are first drawn out by the complaining party, or by someone appointed by him or her, shall be the arbitrators to decide the matter in difference. In case of a vacancy or vacancies another or others shall be elected at a general meeting." The plaintiff had sent in a demand in writing to have his case referred to arbitration. The arbitrators had heard the case and decided that he should be expelled under the 58th rule, as they were of opinion that he had received the benefit of the lodge at the time he was able to work.

E. Cross, for the plaintiff, contended that the court had power to hear the case; the award of the arbitrators was a nullity, for the rule of the society had not been complied with. The rule said that at the second meeting of the society, after the rules were certified by the registrar, five arbitrators should be appointed, &c. Now this had not been done, therefore the dispute was not properly referred.

J. W. Cooper on the other side.—The court cannot inquire into the award; if the award is fraudulent there is another remedy. The sole question is, whether the rule of the society is not sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court. All had been done properly, although, in fact at the second meeting after the rules were certified no arbitrators had been appointed, yet at that time there were five gentlemen who acted as arbitrators to the old society before it was established under the rules now certified by the registrar. In the next place, the rule gave power to fill up vacancies, and as soon as the submission to arbitration came they were filled up in accordance with the rule. True, one portion of the rule had not been complied with, viz., that the complaining party, or some one on his behalf, attended on the drawing of the names, but this was the fault of the plaintiff, who had notice to attend. Whatever objection might be valid was taken away when the plaintiff demanded a settlement by arbitration in accordance with the 69th rule. The learned counsel quoted Reg v. Evans, 3 E. & B. 363.

His HONOUR took time to consider, and on the 12th Oct. nonsuited the plaintiff.

Judgment accordingly.

ELY QUARTER SESSIONS.

Wednesday, Oct. 20.

(Before JOHN RICHARDSON FRYER, Esq., Chairman.)

HOBBS v. PELL AND OTHERS, JUSTICES, &c.

The Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869—Appeal—Rateable value—House and land rated together.

Upon an application for a certificate under the "Wine and Beerhouse Act 1869," the magistrates refused the certificate upon the ground of insufficient proof of rateable value. Upon an appeal to the quarter sessions, it appeared that the appellant was rated for a public house, and six acres, sixteen perches of land all adjoining at 10l. 18s.

Held, that the house itself, without the land, not being of sufficient rateable value that the certificate was properly refused, and that the land, although held with the house, could not be said to be "premises held therewith" within the meaning of the first section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61.

Held also that the quarter sessions had no power to grant a case, and that the rate book was conclusive evidence of rateable value, and lastly, that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

This was an appeal by William Hobbs, the younger, against the decision of Oliver Claude Pell, Esq., and other magistrates of the Isle of Ely, who had refused the appellant a certificate under "The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869," upon the ground that the house for which he applied for a licence was not duly qualified according to law.

Naylor (instructed by Cross), for the appellant. Mills and Perkins (instructed by Evans), for the respondents.

The appellant William Hobbs, the younger, it appeared occupied a public house together with six acres sixteen perches of land all inclosed in one fence, and had formerly been licensed for the house and premises by the excise. The appellant was rated as follows, from the extract of the rate book.

No. 129.

Name of occupier—Hobbs, Wm. Jr.

Name of owner—Stevens Jordan.

Description of property rated—Public house and land.

Situation—2nd drive.

Estimated extent—6a. 16p.

Gross estimated rental—126l. 16s.

Rateable value—10l. 18s.

Naylor, for the appellant, contended that the house and the land together, being rated at a sum exceeding 8l., it was sufficient, to all intents and purposes. The land and the house were part of the same premises, for a sale of beer upon any part of the land, would be a sale of beer on the premises.

The CHAIRMAN.—The question is, whether the house, separated from the land, is sufficient.

Mills.—We admit the rating. The question is, whether the house and land being rated together is sufficient. We say that the rateable value of the land being deducted, it leaves only 4l. as the rateable value of the house.

Naylor called Alfred Asplen, the vestry clerk of Downham, who produced the rate books, and stated that he knew the house in question, "The Dog and Gun." Independent of the land, the house and buildings were worth 8l. 10s. a year.

In cross-examination by Mills, witness admitted that the adjoining land was rated at 23s. an acre; he considered that the rateable value of the house was 8l., and the rental 12l. Appellant had never stated he was dissatisfied as to the amount of his rating. Did not know the rent actually paid, but the land was arable.

The CHAIRMAN.—Suppose the case of a lease of this house, surely the house and premises would not include the land?

Naylor.—Under the peculiar circumstances, it would. It is not the fault of the appellant that he is rated in one sum, and therefore he ought not to suffer by it. There is evidence that the rateable value of the house alone is 8l., and the rate-book is not conclusive as to the rateable value.

Mills.—The court of quarter sessions have no power to alter the rate, and the rate-book is sole evidence.

The CHAIRMAN.—The Court is unanimously of opinion that the decision of the magistrates was right, and that the land cannot be said to be "premises held with the house" within the meaning of the Act, and they also think the rate-book conclusive evidence of the rating.

Naylor asked for a case.

Mills.—The court have no power to grant one, their decision is final; it is expressly so stated.

The CHAIRMAN.—We would grant a case, Mr. Naylor, but we have no power to do so.

Mills applied for costs.

Naylor argued that costs were discretionary, but the Chairman held they were bound to grant them.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

NEW PRISON FOR MIDDLESEX.

A general meeting of the magistrates of the county of Middlesex was held recently at the Sessions House, Clerkenwell, under the presidency of Mr. Pownall, when a report was presented from the special committee appointed by the court to inquire and report where, and on what terms, a site suitable for the erection of a new prison thereon may be obtained. The report was as follows:—

"Your committee, as the first step in carrying out the order of reference made to them by the court, caused advertisements to be published for land, and received in pursuance of such advertisements offers of forty-six plots. Your committee determined that it would be greatly for the convenience of the county that a site within the metropolitan area should be selected, provided the same could be obtained at a price that was not excessive. They therefore limited in the first instance their inspection to the following sites: Camden-road, about 8 acres; Highbury-vale, between 12 and 13 acres; Mill-hill Park, Acton, about 13 acres; Bedford House, Acton, about 12 acres; West Brompton, about 6½ acres; and from the contiguity of the Highbury-vale site to Clerkenwell, they consider it possesses some advantages which the others do not. They therefore recommend that the committee be authorised to enter into a provisional contract with the vendors, to be subject to the approval of the court, at the next November session, at a sum not exceeding 12,250l."

Mr. Wyatt moved the adoption of this report.

Mr. Serjeant Payne moved the following amendment: "That the Secretary of State having acted upon the principle recently mooted in this court by commuting the sentence on Archibald Brown, convicted of forgery, on condition that he immediately quitted England, and remained abroad during the residue of the five years to which he had been sentenced, it is highly desirable that this court should confer with the Home Secretary to ascertain whether a like proceeding cannot be adopted with regard to many other persons imprisoned for comparatively small offences, whereby a sufficient portion of the House of Correction might be cleared for the reception of greater criminals without subjecting the ratepayers of the county to the heavy expense of creating a new prison." He urged that the prison was at present largely occupied by persons sent there for comparatively unimportant offences, and that the Secretary of State for the Home Department should be consulted as to whether some provision could not be made for taking them out of this prison, and the space so vacated be occupied by prisoners who had committed graver offences. He found that the parish of Stoke Newington had strongly remonstrated against the proposition for building a new prison in that locality, and no doubt other parishes would be found opposed to it; and even if it were necessary to have a new prison, he said that the other day 100,000 acres of land were offered for sale at 5s. an acre, and if it were built there, there would be a great saving in the interest of the money that would be required for building on the site now proposed.

Mr. Frowen seconded the amendment.

Mr. Northall Laurie said that they must meet this case by providing a new prison; but at the same time he advocated a large augmentation of the police force, so that crime should not be committed with the impunity which was inseparable from the present limited number of the police. As to sending old offenders out of the country they would not go; and until they had a larger police force to prevent the commission of crime, he saw no alternative but to erect a new prison.

After a discussion had taken place, the amendment was negatived, and the original motion was adopted.

REAL PROPERTY LAWYER AND CONVEYANCER.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

AGREEMENT FOR A LEASE BY LETTERS—PAROL VARIATION.—By three letters which passed between the parties, the defendant agreed to demise to the plaintiff a dwelling-house and its appurtenances. The agreement was in the letters complete, but the defendant refused to grant the lease on the terms which the letters expressed, on the ground of a verbal understanding that the lease should contain a covenant by the plaintiff to expend 1000l. in improvements. The plaintiff denied that this was any part of the terms, and resisted the insertion of such a covenant, but he expended upwards of 500l. on the property: Held (affirming the decision of Stuart, V. C.), that the evidence in support of the alleged addition failing to establish it, the plaintiff was entitled to such a lease as the letters taken alone provided for: Taylor v. Portington, 7 De G. M. & G. 328, commented on and distinguished: (Dear v. Verity, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 185. L. J.J.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER—ACKNOWLEDGMENT.—B. contracted to purchase from S. a freehold property for which an agreement was entered into between them and a deposit paid. It turned out that S. was not entitled in fee, but only to an estate pur autre vie with remainder to the use of him and his wife. The wife's acknowledgment to the conveyance being necessary, this formality could not be completed, the sale was therefore considered as abandoned, and the deposit returned. The property was subsequently sold to W., and the conveyance duly acknowledged by the wife. On bill filed by S. for a specific performance of this agreement, and a declaration that W. was a trustee for B. Held, that he was so, and decree for specific performance made as to such interest as S. had in the property, and reference as to the amount of compensation to plaintiff for the interest not conveyed to him: (Barnes v. Wood, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 227. V. C. J.)

VOLUNTARY SETTLEMENT—POWER OF REVOCATION.—M. H. having a general power of appointment by deed or will under her father's will over 3000l. to be raised out of real estate, and being separated from her husband, and lodging with her brother-in-law A., and being threatened with a suit by her son-in-law B., whose wife (her only child) was dead, wished to put the 3000l. out of B.'s power. A. employed his cousin, a solicitor, who prepared, and M. H. executed, a deed which was an absolute appointment of the 3000l. (subject to her life interest) to A. M. H.'s husband died, and she married again, and, as it appeared by evidence, considering that she had appointed the 3000l. by will, A. was applied to for such will, but he said that his wife had it, and it was never produced until after M. H.'s death, which took place little more than a year after, she having by will under a power of revocation contained in the settlement, revoked part of the trusts, and given the bulk of the 3000l. to C., and the rest to her second husband. A. applied for and kept the settlement for some weeks, and it appeared in a bill of costs of his solicitor that he was advised to keep quiet about the appointment. On bill filed to set aside the appointment in favour of A., decree with costs: (Chart v. Ackworth, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 224. V.C.M.)

WILL—MORTMAIN—UNCERTAINTY.—B. directed the residue of his personal estate to be converted into money and applied to construct a well, tank, and public pump, and if any surplus, to be paid to the rector of the place for the benefit of a school there. The gift for the well, &c., was held to be void, and as the surplus could not be ascertained, the whole gift was void: (Kirkman v. Lewis, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 191. M.R.)

MORTGAGE—EQUITY OF REDEMPTION—RELEASE—AGREEMENT.—Mortgagees brought an action of ejectment, in July 1863, against the mortgagor, who was in possession of the mortgaged property. The action was compromised, upon these terms: that the mortgagor should give up possession to the mortgagees on the 29th Sept. then next, and should release to them (if required) all his right, claim, and interest in the mortgaged property, the release to be prepared at the expense of the mortgagees; the mortgagees agreeing, in consideration of the mortgagor agreeing to give such possession and execute such release, to forego all claim in respect of costs of the action, but in case default should be made by the mortgagor in the giving of such possession, or the execution of such release (if required), the mortgagees should be entitled to the costs: A release was never required, and the mortgagor continued in possession till 1865, when the mortgagees sold the property under the trust for sale contained in the mortgage-deed, and realised more than sufficient to pay their principal, interest, and costs: Held, that the compromise was an agreement in fieri, which had been abandoned by all parties and could not now be carried out, and that the mortgagor was entitled to the surplus proceeds of sale, after paying to the mortgagees their principal, interest, and costs: (Rushbrook v. Lawrence, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 192. M.R.)

SETTLEMENT—AFTER ACQUIRED PROPERTY.—On the marriage of C. and F., 5000*l.* was vested in trustees on the usual trusts, and C. and F. covenanted with the trustees that if F., her executors or administrators, or C., his executors or administrators in her right, should at any one time become absolutely entitled to real or personal estate of the value of 200*l.* or more, C. and F., their executors or administrators, should vest it in the trustees, on certain trusts. C. and F., his wife, went to New Zealand, where C. acquired real estate, which he left by his will as F. should appoint by deed or will, and in default to her children. The widow dealt with this property by absolute appointment to herself: Held, that this property was not within the covenant, that the words "during the coverture" were intended to be inserted, and that the words "executors or administrators" made no difference: (Carter v. Carter, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 194. V.C.M.)

JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES' LAW JOURNAL.

NOTES ON NEW DECISIONS.

WINDING-UP—POWERS OF LIQUIDATOR.—Sect. 95 of the Companies Act defines the power of the liquidator to be exercised with the sanction of the court; sect. 96 enacts that the court may authorise the exercise of those powers without its sanction or intervention; sect. 160 provides for compromises by the liquidator with the sanction of the court. It was held that to support an order conferring these powers on the liquidator exclusively, there must be a constat justifying the exercise of a judicial discretion on the part of the judge: (Re The South-Eastern Railway, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 220. L.J.J.)

WINDING-UP—MONEY RECEIVED BY A DIRECTOR FROM A PROMOTER.—O., being asked by K., a promoter of a company, to become a director of the company, the qualification for which was the holding of fifty shares of 10*l.* each, declined to do so, and then K. offered to provide the qualification for him. O., under these circumstances, consented, and N., another of the promoters, out of the profit which he made by the sale of certain property to the company, paid up fifty shares in full for O. There was no completed agreement for sale of the property by N. to the company before O. became a director. The company having been ordered to be wound-up, an application was made by the official liquidator, under sect. 165 of the Companies Act 1862, for an order that O. should repay the 500*l.* paid-up for him by N. as being money of the company retained by O.: Held, (affirming the M.R.), that the sale by N. to the company not being repudiated, no such order could be made: (Orgill's Case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 221. L. J. Giffard.)

DAMAGES FROM VIBRATION OF A RAILWAY—COMPENSATION.—An action was brought against a railway company to recover an amount assessed by a jury, as a compensation "for vibration from the use of the railway after construction." The damage did not arise from negligence, but was the inevitable consequence of the proper and ordinary use of the railway: Held (reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber), that, first, no action would lie for the damages sustained; for the Legislature having given power to the company to employ locomotive engines, if such locomotives cannot possibly be used without occasioning vibration and consequent injury to neighbouring houses, upon the principle of law that cuiusque aliquid quid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res ipsa esse, non potuit, it must be taken that power is given to cause that vibration without liability to an action. The case of Re v. Pease, 4 B. & Ad. 30, and Vaughan v. Taff Vale Railway Company, 5 H. & N. 679, approved. Secondly (Lord Cairns dissenting), that there was no title to compensation for the damage sustained; for the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 6 and 16, provides compensation only for damage caused by the "construction," and not by the "use," of the railway. The headings to the groups of sections in the above Act indicate the general object of the provisions immediately following, and may be usefully referred to to determine the sense of any doubtful expression in a section ranged under a particular heading. The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 68) has no direct bearing on the above question: (The Hamersmith and City Railway Company v. Brand, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 238. H. of L.)

INCREASE IN NOMINAL VALUE OF SHARES—NOTICE TO TRANSFEROR.—The nominal value of shares had been increased by a company from 20*l.* to 40*l.* each without formal notice to the original applicants. B. had obtained twenty shares which he transferred to C., but the transfer deed was not executed. B. was held to be a contributory to the amount of 20*l.* per share only: (Gustard's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 196. V.C.J.)

TRANSFER OF SHARES—SET-OFF.—B. applied for 100 shares; twenty were allotted on 22nd April 1864. In Nov. 1865 B. contracted to sell them to C. Calls became due, and B. remitted the amount to C. to pay to the company, which was indebted to C. in a much larger sum. C. tendered to the secretary in payment of the calls certain coupons of the company which he held, and which were refused. The transfer had not been registered. B. was held to be a contributory in respect of these shares: (Holden's case, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 197. V.C.J.)

PRIVATE BILL—LOCUS STANDI.—The commissioners for the township of K. were empowered to construct waterworks and to levy water rates, but did not exercise the power, and in default of such supply, a railway company constructed, at their own expense, an aqueduct for the supply of their station within the township. A Bill was now promoted constituting a new body of commissioners, and empowering them (inter alia) to contract with the corporation of D. for a supply of water for the township, and to levy for that purpose such rates as the existing commissioners were authorised to levy: Held, that though the Bill proposed to give no new rating powers, the railway company had a limited locus standi against clauses relating to water supply: (Kingsdown Town Bill, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 199. Court of Referees.)

MEROANTILE LAW.

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

LIABILITIES OF BANKERS AS GRATUITOUS BAILEES.—A box containing debentures and other securities was deposited at a bank, the depositor keeping the key. The bank received no payment for their care of the box, which was kept in a strong room with similar boxes of other customers, and with property belonging to the bank. The debentures were stolen by the cashier of the bank. In an action by the depositor against the bank, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, but a rule to enter a nonsuit was afterwards made absolute. On appeal to the Judicial Committee: Held, that the bank were not bound to take more than ordinary care of the deposit entrusted to them, and that the negligence for which alone they could be made liable would have been the want of that ordinary care which men of common prudence generally exercise about their own affairs. It is not, however, sufficient to exempt a gratuitous bailee from liability, that he keeps goods deposited with him in the same manner as he keeps his own, though this degree of care will ordinarily repel the presumption of gross negligence. The term "gross negligence" is not intended as a definition, but is useful as expressing the practical difference between the degrees of negligence for which different classes of bailees are responsible: (Giblin v. McMullen, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 214. P.C.)

PARTNERSHIP—BILLS—GENERAL AND SEPARATE CREDITORS.—K., a member of a Japon firm of merchants, being about to go to England, drew bills in three sets, as representing his share, took one set to New York, and died there. The bills so taken by K. were lost, and another set were indorsed to abide the decision of the court on a question raised in consequence of the subsequent failure of the firm, as between the general and separate creditors of K.: Held, that it being clear on the evidence that the firm was insolvent at the date of the bills, they belonged to the estate of the firm: (Re Kempton's Mortgage, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 223. V.C.M.)

MARITIME LAW

NOTES OF NEW DECISIONS.

SALVAGE—DERELICT—REMUNERATION.—A large value of a derelict saved may authorise a large reward, even in the absence of any great amount of damage incurred by the salvor. Where, therefore, a derelict vessel of value 13,000*l.* was rescued from being wrecked, a tender of 500*l.* by the defendant was held insufficient, and a sum of 1100*l.* and costs were awarded to the salvors: (The Burns, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 232. Adm. Ireland.)

HARBOUR DUES—LOCAL HARBOUR ACT—WHAT AMOUNTS TO A "LANDING" OF GOODS—TOLLS.—By their local Harbour Act (1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 99), the defendants are entitled to levy tolls on goods, &c., "landed," or "shipped within the cobb or harbour" of Lyme Regis. Cargoes of limestone, which were dug at the plaintiff's quarries, situate on the shore to the westward of the harbour, were brought thence coastwise in boats into the harbour, and, by leave of the defendants, were shot out from the boats into the water at a spot within the harbour between high and low water mark, there to remain until they should be reshipped for exportation; and it was held (dissentiente Channell, B.), by the majority of the Court of Exchequer (Kelly, C.B. and Bramwell and Cleasby, BB.), that the depositing the limestone at the spot in question, in the manner above-mentioned, was not a "landing" of the same within the meaning of the Local Harbour Act, so as to entitle the defendants to levy a toll thereupon as upon goods "landed" within the cobb or harbour. Leak and another (qui tam) v. Howel and another, Cro. Eliz. 533, cited and distinguished: (Harvey v. The Mayor, &c., of Lyme Regis, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 227. Ex.)

COLLISION—NEGLIGENCE—PRACTICE.—Plaintiffs on the 1st Feb. 1869, were, it being then daylight, in their yawl, which was at anchor, fishing in the bay of Dublin, when the defendants' steamer, on board of which there was no look-out at the time, bore down upon them. Plaintiffs, to save themselves from a collision, jumped overboard into the water. Said plaintiffs then brought their action, and Pigot, C.B. before whom the trial was had, told the jury that if the plaintiffs, through a reasonable apprehension of danger ensuing to them from the negligent acts of the defendant, committed acts themselves, namely, jumping into the water, whereby they suffered damage, however slight, that the defendants should be liable in damages for the consequences: (Murphy v. Pulgrave, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 209. Pigot, C.B.)

COUNTY COURTS.

READING COUNTY COURT.

(Before HENRY JAMES STONOR, Esq., Judge.)

GOLDSMITH v. HARRIS.

A governess is entitled to board and lodging as well as salary in lieu of notice.

This was an action by Miss Goldsmith, who had been an English governess, to recover 29l. 4s. 8d. from Miss Harris, of Albion-place, London-road, Reading. The money was claimed in lieu of notice, and for board and lodging.

The particulars were these:—One term's salary, 16l. 13s. 4d.; one ditto in lieu of notice, 16l. 13s. 4d.; and eight weeks' board and lodging at one guinea per week.

Pater appeared for the plaintiff.

Greene for the defendant.

Pater, in opening the case, explained that in the month of May the plaintiff was engaged as an English governess in Miss Harris's school. He read the correspondence which took place with regard to the engagement, from which it appeared that the engagement was to be subject to a quarter's or a term's notice to terminate either at Christmas, Easter, or July. Some time after Miss Goldsmith entered upon her duties, she visited at Mr. White's, at Richmond House, and went with Mrs. and the Misses White to the Plymouth Brethren's meeting. In consequence of this Miss Harris told the plaintiff that she was not fit any longer to associate with her pupils. Consequently on the 7th Aug. Miss Goldsmith left the school, and Miss Harris paid her 12l. 10s., a quarter's salary. Miss Goldsmith contended that she was also entitled to 20l. 16s. 8d. in lieu of notice, and 8l. 8s. for board and lodging. Mr. Pater put in the letter containing the terms of the agreement.

Greene called attention to the fact that the letter was not stamped, and submitted that being an agreement it should be stamped.

After a discussion of the point as to whether the document ought to be stamped or not, the judge decided that it must be stamped and the penalty 10l. paid.

Greene, in addressing the court for the defence, said the whole question turned upon whether the plaintiff was entitled to a quarter's notice or not.

The JUDGE, interrupting Mr. Greene, said he considered that the plaintiff was entitled to a quarter's notice to end either at Christmas, Easter, or July, subject of course to any grounds of dismissal being proved.

Greene, after further addressing the court, called Mr. Bartlett to show that the defendant, through Mr. Bartlett, had offered to pay a quarter's salary to settle the action, and that he tendered a cheque payable to order for the amount. Mr. Beale promised to settle the matter if Mr. Bartlett would send a cheque payable to bearer, or send cash. Afterwards Mr. Beale refused to settle the matter, saying his client should have what she could get.

The JUDGE.—That was a very proper offer under the circumstances, but you have got to defend your action yet.

The defendant was called for the defence, and the JUDGE then said:—I think you have not the shadow of a defence on the merits of the case, but at the same time I think the defendant's offer of a quarter's salary was a very proper offer under the circumstances. I think, now, that if the defendant would pay the quarter's salary and the costs of this action, it would be a good way to settle the matter; still I must say that I am with the plaintiff on the point of law.

Ultimately his HONOUR said to Pater.—You are entitled to a verdict for the full amount with costs on the higher scale. Money to be paid in a fortnight.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT 1869.

The Liverpool Chamber of Commerce through their chairman, have addressed to the Lord Chancellor the following memorial with respect to several defects in the new Act:—

My Lord,—I am requested by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce to bring under your Lordship's attention certain points of the Bankruptcy Act 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), with the view of asking your Lordship to make such orders as will secure the objects which this chamber desires.

1. Composition with creditors. Sect. 126.—It appears somewhat doubtful whether the majority in number and three-fourths in value, named in paragraph 2, sect. 126, refers to all the creditors, or only to such of them as may be present at the meeting. If it refers to those only who attend the meeting, then I beg your Lordship to order that such attendance may be either personally or by proxy, as in sect. 16, sub-sect. 6. Should this not be done, and those creditors only allowed to vote who are at the meeting in person, the debtor, who in many cases resides in a town distant from that in which the main body of his creditors live, would be able practically to dispose of the estate as he pleased, by simply calling the meeting at his own town and compelling his creditors to leave their own business to attend it, or have the matter decided by such of the debtor's friends and neighbours as choose to attend. There can be no reason why the right of the creditor to delegate an agent to act for him should be taken away, and any such disability would operate as a serious injustice.

2. There appears to be no provision in sect. 126 obliging creditors, before voting upon any offer of composition, to prove their debts, as provided now by Moffatt's Act, (31 & 32 Vict. c. 104), s. 3. The passing of this Act was found indispensable to check the frauds common under deeds of composition, and such a provision is equally necessary under the new Act.

3. At the second meeting of the creditors, under sect. 126, for the confirmation of the extraordinary resolution accepting the debtor's offer of composition, the majority in number and value should be defined to be of such creditors as have proved their debts in the prescribed manner; and the votes of the creditors should be taken, either personally or by proxy, or in writing, in a manner prescribed. This is the present practice in compositions in the Irish Courts of Bankruptcy, and the same practice is adopted in sect. 16 of this Act.

I beg most respectfully to submit to your Lordship that these points may be dealt with by your Lordship in the orders which you are by the Act authorised to make; and that, whilst they impose no hardship on the debtor, the modifications I have enumerated are necessary to protect the just rights of the creditors, and to guard against fraud.

I now beg to draw your Lordship's attention to two points which appear to this chamber to be serious defects in the Act itself, for the cure of which I apprehend further legislation may be necessary.

1. Sect. 6 enacts that a single creditor, or any number of creditors, whose debts altogether amount to 50l., may petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against a debtor, alleging that he has committed any of the specified acts which are to be defined acts of bankruptcy; but on looking at the definition of these acts (sub-sect. 6) your Lordship will find that, unless the debtor owes to some one of the petitioning creditors a sum of 50l., it is not in the power of any number of them to make him a bankrupt; and as the power of imprisonment for debts of 20l. and upward is taken away there are no means of compelling an insolvent trader owing less than 50 to an individual creditor to distribute his assets. This is clearly an oversight, since the language of sect. 6 implies that any number of creditors whose debts together amount to 50l. shall have the power of obtaining an adjudication against an insolvent debtor; and this section is inconsistent with sub-section 6, which enacts that a sum of 50l. must be due to one of the petitioning creditors. I am requested to press upon your Lordship's attention the propriety of reducing the limit for the petitioning creditor's debt to 20l., upon this simple principle, that a trader's inability to pay a debt of 20l., admitted to be due, is a more conclusive proof of his insolvency than his inability to pay a larger sum; whilst, as a matter of fact, the daily transactions between the wholesale merchants on the one hand, and the retail traders on the other, which in the aggregate amount to many millions sterling, are made up of separate sums, which commonly average less than 50l. each.

2. By sect. 126 the compounding debtor is bound to do certain things, namely, to send notices to his creditors, to make out a statement of his assets and liabilities, to attend meetings, &c.; but no penalties are imposed upon him for any neglect or wilful misstatement, or fraudulent concealment, of which he may be guilty. The Bankruptcy Act, and the Imprisonment for Debt (Abolition) Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), in their penal clauses, contain provisions for punishing wilful neglect, misstatement, or fraud on the part of bankrupts and liquidating debtors; but the case of compounding debtors, which is the commonest, and at the same time the most important of all, has been overlooked.

When the penal clauses in the Imprisonment for Debt Act were drawn, there was no clause in the Bankruptcy Act authorising deeds of composition; and what is now needed is that those penal clauses shall be extended so as to cover equally fraudulent misconduct, whether in cases of bankruptcy, liquidation, or composition.

In conclusion I beg to say that if it should be your Lordship's pleasure to hear further the opinions of this chamber with regard to the points now submitted for your consideration, and to honour me with an interview for the purpose, I shall be in London about the end of November, when it will afford me much pleasure to wait upon your Lordship, if I shall in the meantime receive permission to do so.—I am, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

CHARLES CLARK, President.

BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Friday, Oct. 23.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE.)

Bankruptcy Act 1861—Sect. 109—One creditor a majority for the purpose of making a resolution—Transferring proceedings to County Court.

In the matter of George Barker Matthews, a bankrupt residing at Elsing, in Norfolk, at the meeting for choice of assignee there was only one proof of debt tendered, and the attorney to whom the power was given asked to have his client appointed creditors' assignee, and a resolution made transferring the proceedings to the Norfolk County Court.

Linay (of Norwich), who appeared for the bankrupt, said the resolution must be by the majority in number and value of the creditors present, and in this case there was only one creditor.

The REGISTRAR considered that, although there might be something in the point, as all the creditors resided in Norfolk, the proceedings had better be sent down to the County Court there, and the order was made accordingly.

Sadd, Norwich, solicitor for the bankrupt.

Claburn, Norwich, solicitor for the creditor.

NOTES AND QUERIES ON POINTS OF PRACTICE.

[N.B.—None are inserted unless the name and address of the writers are sent, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee for bona fides.]

Queries.

114. DIVORCE—PAUPERS.—In the ecclesiastical courts upon a pauper presenting a petition to sue in forma pauperis, counsel and solicitor were assigned. By the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 85 persons are to be admitted as paupers subject to rules to be made in pursuance of the Act. At the registry they inform me that counsel and solicitor are not now assigned, in opposition to the practice laid down in G. Browne's Divorce Practice, p. 204, and Browning, p. 211. I shall be obliged if any of your correspondents can refer me to a case upon the subject under the new practice. W. T.

115. WILL.—To this question, which appeared in the LAW TIMES of 15th May last, "M. E. S.," on the 22nd, gave an answer in the affirmative. This agreed with my own opinion; but the purchaser objects to the title on the ground that if the surviving son should die without issue in the widow's lifetime, the estate would go to the testator's sisters, who would then be his heirs. Will "M. E. S.," or any other of your correspondents, favour me with a reference to some authority bearing on this point? Q.

116. ASSAULT.—A. is convicted before the magistrates of a common assault, and fined 5l. Can an action be maintained by the complainant in the County Court to recover damages for bodily injury sustained by the assault, and for medical attendance? Please refer to authorities.—R. P.

117. NOTICE TO GOVERNNESS.—A lady was engaged as governess, at a certain salary per annum, at Lady Day 1865. No agreement or arrangement was made as to notice to terminate it. She has always been paid her salary on the four usual quarterly days. On the 23rd inst. she received notice that her services will not be required after Christmas next. Is she entitled to a quarter's notice? and, if so, should it be given on a quarter day, or is she bound to accept one served at any intervening period of a quarter? D.

Answers.

(Q. 104.) CONVEYANCE—COVERTURE.—I am very much obliged to your correspondent, J. Bell, for his very able reply to my insufficient query in the LAW TIMES of the 9th inst., on this point; but I am afraid he gave himself far more anxiety and trouble in the matter than was needful, seeing that the issue involved is so small. However, I will, Mr. Editor, with your permission, now proceed to supply what I was previously aware was omitted in my query in question. In doing so, I may preface my quotations by stating that (as your correspondent will observe), the conveyance in question was not made to S. B. through the intervention of a trustee, but as under. The operative words are "grant, release, convey, and assure unto the said S. B. and her heirs, &c., to such uses, &c., as S. B., whether married or sole, should appoint by deed or will, and, in default, to the use of the heirs and assigns of the said S. B. for ever," and not "To the use of the said S. B., her heirs, and assigns, for ever," as anyone would suppose. At present S. B. has not made any appointment or other disposition. Query—Can she do so? If so, it is evident the husband need not join, and no acknowledgment is necessary. But I find on reference to Halliday's Questions and Answers on Conveyancing, 4th edit. p. 188, that where a power of appointment over real estate is executed, the appointee takes in point of estate from the party creating, and not from the party executing the power, because no estate, but a use is only passed from the party executing the power; and estates created by the execution of a power take effect in precisely the same manner as if created by the deed which raised the power: (Sug. Pow. ch. 5, s. 8; Burt. Comp. Pl. 346-787; 1 Steph. Com. 507, 1st edit.; see also query and answer at the beginning of this page, or supra, and subsequently.) If, therefore, your correspondent can throw any additional light on this point, I shall be very thankful; and if I be under any misapprehension on the subject, I am open to conviction, and to correction. I take it that, there being no issue of the marriage, if S. B. dies without exercising her power (if good and valid), the estate would go to her heir-at-law as purchaser, and not by descent. W. H.

(Q. 109.) WILL—POWER—CONVEYANCING.—It is quite clear that the trustees have full power to appoint the fee-simple to a purchaser, although there is no express power given to them to revoke the uses to take effect in remainder. "A power to appoint includes in itself a power to revoke; and a power to do an act which can only be effected by appointment, authorises an appointment, and therefore a revocation. Whatever be the form in which a power of sale is given, it will operate as a power of revocation, and new appointment, and may be executed accordingly." (Sugd. Pow. 196; Bishop of Oxford v. Leighton, 2 Vern. 367.) The following would be the form of the testament:—"Now this indenture witnesseth that for effecting the sale, and in consideration, &c., they, the said A. B. and C. D., in exercise of the said power contained in the hereinbefore in part recited will, and of every or any other power enabling them, and at the request and with the approbation and consent of the said (the widow) (testified by her being a party to and executing these presents), do hereby revoke, determine, and make void all and every the estates, uses, trusts, powers, provisions, and limitations by and in the hereinbefore in part recited will limited, expressed, declared, and contained of and concerning the hereditaments and premises hereinafter expressed to be hereby applied, and do limit, declare, and appoint that all, &c., shall henceforth go and remain to the use of the said (his heirs, and assigns for ever." As the trustees have the legal estate as well as the power of sale, it would be desirable to confirm the conveyance by a grant, and another testament can be added, but it is not absolutely necessary. Newport, Monmouth, Oct. 25. W. W. C.

— Every appointment is, in effect, a revocation pro tanto of existing uses and estates, and an express power of revocation is merely surplusage. It is not quite clear from the statement of the case whether the trustees of the power of sale took the legal fee, or whether the life estate and remainders were executed at law under the Statute of Uses. It will probably be found that the Statute of Uses did not operate, and that the legal fee remained in the trustees. The trustees, with the consent of the tenant for life, should grant and appoint the fee, and the tenant for life should, as to her estate, grant and confirm. If the conveyance be not simply to and to the use of the purchaser, and there be any doubt whether the trustees take the legal fee, they should appoint to the uses to be after expressed, and by a separate testament the trustees and tenant for life should grant and confirm the property to the grantee to uses and his heirs with a declaration that the appointment and conveyance should enure to the uses intended. Z. Y.

(Q. 111.) UNSTAMPED GUARANTY—RENEWED ACTION.—The 23 Vict. 15, s. 15, only applies when "it shall appear thereby," i.e., by the agreement that the matter thereof is under the value of 20l. As that fact is not patent on the agreement, I think the Somerset House authorities correct in requiring the higher penalty. Z. Y.

(Q. 113.) ADOPTION OF CHILD.—B. cannot legally detain the child. A contract by a father not to exercise control over his children is contrary to the policy of the law, unless the father's misconduct has been so gross as to unfit him for the society of his children: (Vansittart v. Vansittart, 31 L. T. Rep. 4; Swift v. Swift, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 435.) Z. Y.

Practical Remarks on the Principle of Rating, as applied to the proper and uniform assessment of Railways. By HENRY JAMES CASTLE, Surveyor, assisted by EDWARD JAS. CASTLE, Barrister-at-Law. London: Maxwell.

How to rate a railway is a problem as perplexing to judges as to magistrates. Divers attempts have been made by the Superior Courts to lay down something like principles, but they are found to fail when they come to be applied to the infinite varieties of circumstances. It is indeed more a question for the skilled surveyor than for the lawyer, although the production of experts on one side to prove one thing is almost sure to be met by the production of an equal number on the other side to prove the reverse. This somewhat discreditable conflict of testimony in such cases is mainly due to our English system of leaving it to the public to fight out questions of skill and science, instead of looking to the court to provide experts who shall be the witnesses for neither party, but the informants of the court. We believe that the adoption of this excellent plan of the French tribunals will be recommended by the Judicature Commission, and it will be a great improvement in the law.

Mr. Castle's volume is the combined production of a surveyor and a barrister, and therefore it sets before the reader the whole of the information he requires on a subject which neither could sufficiently treat of from his own point of view. It will much assist in the solution of the problem to which it is directed.

The Vaccination Acts and Instructional Circulars, Orders and Regulations, with Introduction, Notes and Index. By DANBY P. FRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. Fourth Edition. London: Knight and Co.

The agitation so singularly raised against sanitary laws that enforce vaccination on the wholesome principle that a man has no right to spread contagion among his neighbours, is not likely to be successful, and, therefore, this collection of the Acts annotated and indexed will continue to be as useful as it has proved itself to be by three editions. Of books thus in daily use, the latest is the only safe edition to be consulted.

Shelford's Law of Railways, containing the whole of the Statute Law for the regulation of Railways in England, Scotland, and Ireland; with copious Notes of the Decided Cases upon the Statutes, Introduction to the Law of Railways, and Appendix of Official Documents. Fourth edition. By W. CUNNINGHAM GLEN, Barrister-at-Law. In two vols. London: Butterworths.

RAILWAY law has grown to dimensions little dreamed of by Mr. Shelford when he wrote his first book upon the subject. He lived to witness its expansion to a very respectable bulk; but even since the production of the third edition of his treatise there has been a wonderful accretion alike of statute and of case law, and Mr. Glen's fourth edition, greatly as it has expanded, has but kept pace with Parliament and the courts. The cases, indeed, are now so numerous, that one fourth of the entire business of the equity courts is said to be, in some form or another, connected with railways and railway laws. Being thus in a state of continual growth, the practitioner is compelled to use the latest text-book for his guidance. He must discard the old edition for the new, and thus at some cost continually replenish his library, under pain of mistakes, which, in matters of such moment as railway questions, might be as ruinous to his client as to his own reputation. Shelford was one of the most painstaking of legal authors. There are no more laborious books than those which bear his name; and that name was always in itself a recommendation when citations were addressed to the court. Mr. Glen has done wisely in preserving that reputation, and, as far as possible, the text of Shelford—though very extensive alterations and additions have been required. But he has a claim of his own. He is a worthy successor of the original author, and possesses much of the same industry, skill in arrangement, and astuteness in enumerating the points really decided by cited cases. But we have said enough of a work already so well known. We will now merely give to such readers as may not be familiar with the book itself, a short outline of its contents.

The first volume commences with a resumé of the history of railway legislation, taken principally from the report of the Royal Commission on Railways. It then proceeds to describe the successive proceedings requisite to the obtaining of Legislative sanction for the construction of a railway. Then all the statutes relating to railways are given in their order, with copious notes of the cases decided on their construction. The Telegraph Acts follow in the like arrangement and with the like exposition. Then the Tramways

Acts, the Railway Clearing House Acts, and not the least important and interesting, as proceeding from so high an authority on these questions as Mr. Glen, the difficult law relating to the assessment of railways to local taxes. The second volume comprises the various Consolidation Acts, similarly annotated, and a collection of useful forms and precedents, and to each volume there is a singularly copious index.

It will have a place not in the library of the lawyer alone. It is a book which every railway office should keep on its shelf for reference.

A Dissertation on the History of Hereditary Dignities. By W. F. FINLASON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law. London: Butterworths.

There is scarcely a topic of public interest, involving principles having their roots in the past, which this laborious writer does not attack and present to his readers in a manner thoroughly exhaustive. In this dissertation he has considered the history of hereditary dignities with especial reference to the case of the Earl of Wiltes. In his preface he states that the authorities which he cites demonstrate a fact of Constitutional history, extremely important, and of vast interest at the present time, viz., that for centuries creations of peerages were only—or usually—for life. This, he observes, is attested by the authority of the great lawyer, Lord Coke, and by historians, such as Mackintosh and Hallam. And he says "There appears, therefore, to be no restriction upon the power of the Crown to limit its grants of peerages, except that they must not be contrary to good sense or reason, which cannot be predicated of grants in any form already held good, or in accordance with ancient usage. Grants of peerages for life, or to heirs male (i.e., to the male heirs, lineal or collateral), are, it is conceived, equally in accordance with authority and reason; inasmuch as they appear to have been made upon the principle that the Crown can grant peerages in any form which may appear best calculated to secure the benefit of those services in the councils of the State, which have always been presumed to be the consideration, and the object of such creations. The former of these modes of creation attains the object, at all events for the life of the eminent man chosen for the honour; the other, if his heirs are admitted, is most likely to secure it in the future."

With reference to the authority of Lord Coke it is remarked in a note that in his reports, he states that until the reign of Richard II. all new creations of barons were by writ of summons; and both Hallam and Mackintosh point out that the writ was not deemed to confer an hereditary dignity until the sixteenth century. And Lord Coke says, that although the king cannot create an earl or a baron for years, yet, without question, he may create an earl for life: (Sir George Reynell's case, 9 Coke, 98.)

At page 24 of the text Mr. Finlason observes that the Crown might limit the descent of the personal dignities it granted according to its pleasure, provided there was nothing in the limitation unlawful, that is contrary to law, as tending to any result injurious to the State. The descent might be limited to any class of heirs. And it was competent to the Crown to attach conditions or qualifications to the inheritance of the dignity, and to make it attach to the possession of an estate by the heirs of the original grantee—that is, not to the possession of the estate, but to the possession of it by the heirs. And at page 25 he says that no statute was necessary to allow of any limitations of estates in any particular course of descent, or to any particular class of heirs. This he illustrates by a very learned note, which is most instructive, and which we therefore take the liberty of quoting:—

There has been much misapprehension on this point. There was no necessity for any statute to allow of any species of limitation of the gift of an estate, and no such statute was ever passed. The statute de donis conditionalibus, indeed, was passed to protect special limitations of estates from aliens for ever, to the prejudice of the issue intended to take under the gift; but the very scope of the statute implied what, indeed, it recited as its basis, that such gifts should be observed—that is, that such limitations should take effect. Moreover, all that the statute did was to protect them from alienation, which was all that it was necessary to do, for prior to the statute, when such special gifts were construed as conditional fees simple, the only mischief was that they might be altered by alienation, and so the statute merely provided that the issue should not be prejudiced by alienation. If no alienation took place, the land would go according to the gift. No case ever decided the contrary; and the only case cited by Littleton to that effect did not so decide; and the dictum of Paston, J., to that effect, that if land be given to a man and his heirs male he has a fee simple, is quite consistent with the view above quoted, for, as Lord Coke put it, the case would be one of qualified fee simple. The case, however, was one which did not really raise the question, for it was a case of devise with the remainder to heirs male of the body, and in default of issue, then to the next male heir and the heirs male of his body; and the brother claimed as next male heir, he being also heir general; and the decision was that the brother should have the land as heir general, notwithstanding that he was not heir of the body, the word "male" being rejected as void, the remainder taken as a fee simple, because in that case the law gave the male heir a preference; and it was not necessary, therefore, that he should claim as heir male: (9 Hen. 6, p. 23.) It is obvious that the point did not really arise as it would have arisen had the gift been to the female heir. And that case was put in the course of the argument by one of the judges, and it was said that in such case, if there were son and daughter, the daughter should have the land: (Martin, J., fol. 25.) As, however, the court could not agree about it, and it happened that the claimant, the heir male, was also heir general, the court gave him the land as heir general, so that it was not necessary to decide the point, viz., whether, on a gift of lands to heirs male, the collateral heirs male would not take in preference to lineal heirs female. It is conceived that they clearly would, either at common law, as a qualified fee-simple, or by the statute de donis as an estate tail. The terms of the statute de donis certainly do not exclude such a limitation, though as the entails in that age were usually to heirs of the body, those entails only are mentioned; and Littleton, after exhausting all the cases of heirs of the body, says expressly that there are other estates tail; although, forgetting this, he says that an estate to a man and his heirs male is not within the statute. Even, however, if it be not so, it could only follow that it is not protected by the statute from alienation; and the statute has no application to dignities which cannot be alienated, and remain as at common law. This view is in accordance with the view taken by Lord Coke, who laid the law down thus:—"The statute de donis doth not create an estate tail, but of such estate as was fee simple conditional at common law, so now by the statute the land shall descend; and the only mischief was that the donee after issue had power to alien in dishonour of his heirs." (7 Rep. 35.) And so elsewhere he says, "that a limitation to a man and his heirs, tenants of a manor, was a qualified fee simple;" (Coke on Littleton, 27.) The view here submitted is supported by the judgment in a great case on the subject, where it was laid down as law:—"That there were three sorts of estates at common law: First, an absolute estate of inheritance to a man and his heirs; secondly, a fee simple qualified as to the time of duration; thirdly, a fee simple restrained as to what heirs should inherit it. It was only a qualification as to what sort of heirs should inherit, and it was qualified as to the descent of it to such particular heirs as were expressed in the limitation; and therefore if lands at common law were given to a man and the heirs male of his body, and he had issue two sons, and the eldest had issue a daughter, the second son should inherit." (Idle v. Cook, Lord Raym. Rep. 1148.)

Mr. Finlason discusses very carefully the modes in which dignities may be forfeited, but the work is not of a size to justify our further touching upon the author's preserves, and we heartily recommend it as a pleasant study to laymen and lawyers.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.

CERTAIN DEFECTS IN COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. Sherwood Smith read a paper on this subject, in which he pointed out what he considered a serious defect in the law of County Courts. A case was cited which was heard in a County Court in the year 1868, where judgment was given for the plaintiff on the ground that he was considered more worthy of credit than the defendant. Immediately after the trial evidence was tendered to the defendant proving the plaintiff to have sworn falsely, upon which the defendant gave notice of application for a new trial, but found that through taking that course, instead of appealing in the first instance, he had lost the right of appeal, and that although the grievance had increased, all remedy was at an end. This state of things, the writer considered, called for reform, and that a suitor, if aggrieved with the judgment of any court ought to have a right of appeal to a higher one, under any circumstances that might arise.

JURISPRUDENCE AND NATIONAL LAW.

CHARITABLE ENDOWMENTS.

Mr. T. Hare read a paper on the question, "What limits ought to be placed by law on Charitable Endowments?" The writer contended that the main question between advocates and opponents of endowment was whether it was possible to establish a department with power to reverse, and where just and desirable to alter the distinction of endowments after the expiration of a certain time. This had never yet been attempted. It was proved that to attempt direct legislation in each case was useless. A department or minister might lay schemes for the application of endowments to ameliorate the evils accompanying civilization before Parliament, and their adoption might be dependent on either House placing its veto on the proposed change. It was said if endowments were thus varied none would hereafter be given. This, then, would solve the question.

Mr. Lewis Fry opened his paper by showing that the early Statutes of Mortmain did not now exercise any practical restraint upon endowment, having nearly exclusive reference to corporate bodies. Considering the question in what direction we should look in making a change in the law, whether to a total restriction of the power of charitable bequest or the removal of all restrictions, Mr. Fry contended that it would be impolitic and opposed to the feelings of the community to abolish the power of bequest, but that the restriction as to land was of little value, and should be wholly removed. If the distinction between realty and personality were retained, the line should be drawn so that every one, and not only lawyers, should understand it; and he thought that it would be sufficient to prohibit the devise or bequest to charitable uses of actual estates of freehold, or for terms of years in land. In conclusion Mr. Fry advocated that there should be greater freedom in the mode of dealing with property left to a charity, as the benefit of the community might from time to time require.

In the discussion which ensued, Mr. E. C. Batten supported an alteration of the law. Sir J. Bowring thought the matter could only be satisfactorily dealt with by Parliament, and said there were millions of money scattered about, much of it devoted to useless purposes, which might be applied to meet some of the pressing wants of the time. Dr. Waddilove asked how far, in exercising control over charitable funds, we interfered with man's natural right to do what he would with his own, and checked the flow of charitable and religious contributions, or whether we should not rather endeavour to restrain or divert endowments for frivolous purposes. Mr. Hancock objected in toto to charitable bequests, and said there were plenty of ways in which charitable feelings could be indulged in during life; he had no faith in that charity which made a man to leave his property away from his friends. Mr. R. Freeling thought it was not wise to exempt charity property from taxation, and hoped Mr. Gladstone's measure for abolishing such exemption would be adopted. Mr. E. S. Robinson advocated an alteration in the law, contending that in its present state it destroyed conscientiousness, and prevented people from realising their obligations to provide for religion, for education, and for distress. Mr. Webster thought there was great truth in the principle that no generation had a right to contract any liabilities which could not be paid in that generation, and that the converse should be recognised, and that it was more important that money should be employed for educating the present generation than that it should be accumulated for the benefit of their grandchildren. Mr. F. Hill was of opinion that the stoppage of endowments would be most unwise, and a mischievous interference. The evils pointed out by Mr. Robinson arose from misappropriation. He agreed with Mr. Fry that the restrictions of Mortmain should be removed. Mr. T. Webster said the result of recent inquiries went to confirm the opinion of Lord Brougham that existing educational endowments if properly applied were sufficient for educational purposes. He saw no objection to leaving land to charities if it was properly administered. Bequests for distributing alms to the poor were most demoralising, and should be at once abolished, as utterly inconsistent with the Poor Law.

THE SOLICITORS' BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

The twenty-third half yearly general meeting of the members and friends of this association was held at the Board-room, Museum-street, York, on Wednesday, the 20th inst. (during the sittings of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association), in the presence of a very numerous assemblage of members of the Profession, including the principal local solicitors, and others from London and various provincial towns.

Mr. J. J. P. Moody, town clerk of Scarborough, and president of the Yorkshire Law Society, having taken the chair, called upon the secretary, Mr. Eiffe, to read the notice of meeting, and the minutes of last meeting, after which the following report of the directors was read:—

"The directors have much pleasure in availing themselves of the opportunity afforded by the meeting of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association at York, to present before an assemblage of their professional brethren in that ancient city, this their twenty-third half yearly report of the progress and operations of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association, in the prosperity of which institution the directors cannot doubt that the solicitors of Yorkshire will manifest as warm an interest as has been generously evinced by their brethren in other important districts of the kingdom.

"The objects of the institution are so deserving that they must commend themselves to the sympathy and support of every member of the Profession, and it is with much satisfaction that the directors are enabled to report the continued advancement of the institution, and its consequent steadily increasing stability and efficiency for the discharge of those beneficent functions for which it was founded.

"Since the last half yearly report was presented, 74 new members have joined the association, making, with the additions in the previous six months, an increase during the whole year of 167 new members. The association now consists of 2021 members, of whom 702 are life, and 1319 annual; 22 of the life members are also annual subscribers.

"The usual audited abstract of the accounts is appended, from which it will be seen that the receipts during the half-year amount to 1364*l.* 1*s.*, which, added to those of the previous six months, give a total of 3295*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.* as the receipts for the year.

"The late deeply lamented Lord Justice Sir Charles Jasper Selwyn presided over the annual festival in June last, when the high estimation and respect of the Profession for that upright and independent judge were evinced by a large attendance of members of both branches, who by their liberal contributions, following the benevolent example set by the Lord Justice, added to the funds of the institution 534*l.* The directors have a melancholy satisfaction in recording that this was one of the latest public services in which he was engaged; and the warm-hearted readiness with which he accepted their invitation to preside, and the truly benevolent sympathy with which at the dinner he advocated the claims of the institution to generous support, have increased their respect for his memory, and their sorrow at his early death.

"With respect to the relieving operations of the institution during the past half year, the directors have to report that a sum of 110*l.* has been expended in grants to a member and to two widows of members; and a sum of 105*l.* has been distributed in relieving thirteen necessitous families of deceased non-members. These amounts added to the grants made during the previous six months, give a total of 355*l.* distributed in relief of members and their families, and of 160*l.* in relief of non-members' families during the year, making in the whole 515*l.*

"700*l.* have been invested in the purchase of India Four per Cents., and with the investments in the previous six months, make a total sum of 2500*l.* invested during the year. The funded capital of the institution now consists of 7803*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.* India Five per Cents., 5071*l.* 6*s.* 4*d.* Three per Cent. Consols, and 3693*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* India Four per Cents., producing together dividends amounting to 675*l.* per annum.

"A balance of 217*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.* remains to the credit of the association at the Union Bank of London, and a sum of 15*l.* is in the secretary's hands.

"An addition to rule 4, which, owing to the absence of a quorum of members, was not carried at the last general meeting, although unanimously agreed to by those present, will be brought forward at this meeting.

"The directors think it right to mention two projects of some importance which have been urged upon their consideration from time to time by members of this society, but with which they have not felt themselves empowered to deal. One has reference to the establishment of schools for the education of the children of less affluent members of the Profession, at a moderate charge; and the other to a fusion between this society and one of similar objects which has been in existence for many years in London, but limited in its operations to the Profession practising there. With regard to the first proposition, the rules do not appear to the directors to make any provision for the entertainment of the subject in connection with this institution. The question of amalgamation was dwelt upon at the last anniversary festival with approval by the late Lord Justice Selwyn and doubtless it would have its advantages. Union is strength; and should the members of this society be of opinion that it would be desirable, the board will be happy to communicate with the directors of the other society, and ascertain their views on the subject.

"In accordance with the rules of the association, the auditors and directors retire from office at this meeting, but are eligible and willing to continue their services if re-elected.

"In conclusion, the directors venture to urge upon members the importance of lending their cordial aid in promoting the society. It needs but their hearty and united co-operation throughout the kingdom to complete that success which has hitherto attended the society's progress, and to place it in the foremost rank of institutions of a kindred nature."

The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, stated that it was so fully drawn up, it left him but little to say upon the subject. He was happy to preside that day, but it would have afforded him greater pleasure to have seen either of their friends Mr. Banner or Mr. Cookson, the chairman or deputy chairman of the board, present. He was requested, however, to explain that their absence was unavoidable, and a letter which he held in his hand from Mr. Banner expressed that gentleman's great regret at being unexpectedly prevented from attending. It was gratifying to find that the institution was making such steady progress, and he hoped that it would receive a large accession of new members from this meeting. (Hear, hear.)

A member suggested that it was an obstacle to increasing the number of subscribers that the expenses seemed out of proportion to the amount of relief afforded; but the objection was subsequently cleared away by members of the board and others explaining that the expenses were really not great considering the wide area over which the society has to prosecute its canvass for support, and while it was yet, as it might be said, but in its infancy.

After some discussion the report was unanimously agreed to.

A resolution was then adopted, commending the institution to the cordial support of every attorney, solicitor, and proctor in England and Wales; and Mr. Dunn, of Darlington, and Mr. Daggett, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, both handed in long lists of additional members, obtained by their individual efforts in canvassing those towns, and showing how easy a general canvass by local members might strengthen the numbers of the association.

Several gentlemen present then handed their names to the secretary as willing to become members, and Mr. Edward Lawrance, of London, the president of the Metropolitan and Provincial Law Association Meeting, said, that though a life member, he thought persons in his position ought not to make a profit of it. He had been a member of the society a sufficient length of time to exhaust his first subscription of ten guineas, and he now begged to repeat his subscription of that amount. An addition to the fourth rule, of which notice was duly given, was then unanimously agreed to, after which the usual resolutions thanking and re-electing the directors and auditors were passed nem con.

A cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Moody for his kindness in presiding, brought the proceedings to a termination.

THE RIGHT HON. JOHN EDWARD WALSH.

It is with feelings of the deepest regret that we announce the death of the Right Hon. John Edward Walsh, Master of the Rolls. The loss of no public man could be more widely felt; none were more universally or deservedly respected in private life; and none, we may add, seemed to afford greater promise of a long career of public service. Cut off by a mysterious decree of Providence in the prime of life, with a vast field of public usefulness lying before him, John Edward Walsh has, nevertheless, left his mark upon the legal history of Ireland. The three years during which he presided in the Rolls Court will be long and gratefully remembered. He brought to the discharge of his important duties an acute and powerful mind, extensive and accurate learning, sound common sense, and great practical experience. But this was not all. It was the combination of these high intellectual qualifications, with what we may term the moral qualities of uniform courtesy, unwearied industry, and high conscientiousness, that rendered his merit as a judge so conspicuous.

The late Master of the Rolls was the son of the Rev. Dr. Walsh, Rector of Finglas, in the county of Dublin, and was educated in the University of Dublin. His college career was unusually distinguished. He obtained a classical scholarship, the first gold medal in ethics and logic, and was also auditor of the Historical Society—an honour which was recently attained by his eldest son. He was called to the Bar in 1839, and joined the Leinster Circuit. Like many other eminent lawyers who have entered the Profession without the advantages of professional connection, he was for some years without practice. In 1845 he published, in conjunction with Mr. Nunn, a valuable work entitled "The Irish Justice of the Peace," which continued to be the text-book in that branch of the law, until it was rendered obsolete by recent legislation. We find his name in the volumes of the Irish Equity Reports from 1843 to 1852, as a contributor of reports of cases in the Court of Chancery. In 1857 Mr. Walsh was called to the Inner Bar, and at once took a leading position, both on his circuit and at the Chancery Bar. In 1859 he was appointed a Crown Prosecutor, at Green-street, by the present Chief Justice, then Attorney-General; an office which he held until he was appointed Attorney-General in 1866, and became himself the patron of the office which he vacated.

On the accession of Lord Derby's Ministry to power in 1866, and the elevation to the Bench of their former law officers, Mr. Walsh was admittedly the foremost member of the Conservative party at the Irish Bar. His distinguished University career, the reputation which he had achieved in his profession, and the consistency with which he had maintained his political opinions, recommended him to the confidence of the electors of the University of Dublin, who had just lost the services of Mr. Whiteside. Mr. Walsh was returned without opposition, and took his seat in the House of Commons; but his Parliamentary career was short. The dissolution of Parliament followed close upon his election, and before the Long Vacation was over Mr. Walsh had become Master of the Rolls. Of the manner in which he discharged the duties of that high office we have already spoken; and on this subject there is, we believe, but one opinion. He proved himself a worthy occupant of a seat which has been filled by such distinguished predecessors as Curran, O'Loghlen, Blackburne, and Smith. Before no other judge did the advocate of a righteous cause appear with greater confidence, and we may add with greater pleasure. In conducting the routine business of his court, the hearing of motions and summary petitions, the late Master attained the golden mean between laxity and obstructiveness. His judgment in the cause célèbre of MacCormac v. Queen's University, affords a good specimen of the manner in which he dealt with intricate and difficult legal questions. The career of the eminent judge of whom death has deprived us, affords a striking illustration of the legitimate success which, sooner or later, awaits ability, industry, and probity in the honourable profession of which John Edward Walsh was so distinguished an ornament.—Irish Law Times.

BREAKFAST—EPPS'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—The very agreeable character of this preparation has rendered it a general favourite. The Civil Service Gazette remarks:—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills." Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in tinned packets, labelled.—JAMES EPPS and Co., Homoeopathic Chemists, London.

Extract from the Report of the Directors to the Annual General Meeting held on the 17th April, 1869.

The new policies issued were 230 in number, assuring 36,264l., and producing in new premiums the sum of 18,967l. 10s. 9d. The total premiums received in the year were 77,374l. 9s. 6d., and the income from all sources amounted to 97,957l. 12s. 12d.

The charges of management, 34,784l. 12s. 7d. have, notwithstanding the increased business, scarcely exceeded those of the year 1867.

The claims by death which have been paid during the year amounted, including bonuses, to 24,174l. 11s. 11d., assured under 24 policies.—Of this sum, 12,164l. 6s. 8d. fell on the non-profit class, and 11,990l. 5s. 3d. on participating policies. These amounts are below what might have been anticipated, according to the society's tables, and are one-third less than the sums paid for claims in the year 1867.

The existing assurances exceed two millions and a half.

The assets of the society amounted to 425,122l. 16s. 8d., and the average rate of interest at which they were invested, on the 31st Dec., was 4½ per cent. This calculation excludes the sum which represents the value of the society's house, but estimates the amount invested in the purchase of reversions as producing 5 per cent. The increase in the assets during the year exceeded 50,000l., being more than half the total income.

Adding to the above sum the amount of premiums which were actually due at the closing of the account, and which were paid before the expiration of the usual days of grace, viz., 5,224l. 3s. 8d., the assets exceeded half a million sterling.

COLONIAL PRISONERS REMOVAL ACT.

32 VICT. CAP. 10.

Cap. 10.

An Act for authorising the Removal of Prisoners from one Colony to another for the Purposes of Punishment.—[13th May, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to the removal of prisoners from one colony to another for the purposes of punishment:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Colonial Prisoners Removal Act, 1869."

2. Definition of terms.—"Colony"—"Governor"—"Legislative body."—For the purposes of this act—

The term "colony" shall not include any place within the United Kingdom, the Isle of Man, or the Channel Islands, or within such territories as may for the time being be vested in Her Majesty by virtue of any Act of Parliament for the government of India, but shall include any plantation, territory, or settlement situate elsewhere within Her Majesty's dominions, and subject to the same local government; and for the purposes of this act all plantations, territories, and settlements under a central Legislature shall be deemed to be one colony under the same local government:

The term "governor" shall include the officer for the time being administering the government of any colony:

The term "legislative body" shall mean any house of assembly or other body of persons having legislative powers in the colony, and where such body of persons consists of two separate houses it shall include both houses, and where there are local legislative bodies as well as a central legislative body shall mean the central legislative body only.

3. Sect. 4 of 6 Geo. 4 c. 69, repealed.—The fourth section of the act passed in the sixth year of the reign of His late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act for punishing offences committed by transports kept to labour in the colonies, and better regulating the powers of justices of the peace in New South Wales," is hereby repealed, except so far as may be necessary for supporting or continuing any proceedings taken thereunder.

4. Prisoners may be removed from one colony to another for purposes of punishment.—Any two colonies may, with the sanction of an order of Her Majesty in Council, agree for the removal of any prisoners under sentence or order of transportation, imprisonment, or penal servitude from one of such colonies to the other for the purpose of their undergoing in such other colony the whole or any part of their punishment, and for the return of such prisoners to the former colony at the expiration of their punishment, or at such other period as may be agreed upon, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as may seem good to the said colonies.

The sanction of the order of Her Majesty in Council may be obtained, in the case of a colony having a legislative body, on an address of such body to Her Majesty, and in the case of any colony not having a legislative body, on an address of the governor of such colony; and such sanction shall be in force as soon as such order in council has been published in the colony to which it relates.

The agreement of any one colony with another shall for the purposes of this Act be testified by a writing under the hand of the governor of such colony.

5. Removal of prisoners to be by warrant.—Where the sanction of Her Majesty has been given to any such agreement as aforesaid relating to the removal of prisoners from one colony to another for the purpose of undergoing their punishment, any prisoners under sentence or order of transportation, imprisonment, or penal servitude may be removed from such one colony to the other under the authority of a warrant signed by the governor, and addressed to the master of any ship, or any other person or persons; and the person or persons to whom such warrant is addressed shall have power to convey the prisoner therein named to such other colony, and to deliver him when there into the custody of any authority designated in such warrant, or empowered by the governor of such last-mentioned colony to receive such prisoner.

6. Prisoner in legal custody during removal.—Every prisoner shall, from the time of his leaving his prison in one colony to the time of his reaching his prison in the other colony, be deemed to be in the legal custody of the person or persons empowered to remove him, and to be subject to the same restraint, and, in the event of misbehaviour, to the same punishment, as if he had continued in prison, and as if the person or persons empowered to remove him were the gaoler or gaolers of such prison; and if he escape or attempt to escape from such custody, such prisoner, and every person aiding or attempting to aid him in such escape, shall be subject to the same punishment as if such escape or attempt to escape were an escape or attempt to escape from prison.

A prison shall mean any place of confinement or any place where the prisoners undergo punishment.

Any person punishable under this section may be tried and punished either in the colony from which the prisoner is being removed, or in the colony to which he is being removed; and the law applicable to such person shall be the law of the colony in which he is tried.

7. Liability of prisoner in colony to which he is removed.—Every prisoner shall, upon his delivery to the person having lawful authority to receive him in the colony to which he is removed, be subject within such colony to the same laws and regulations, and shall be dealt with in all respects in the same manner, as if he had been tried and received the same sentence in such colony as the sentence which has been passed on him in the colony from which he is removed.

8. Removals heretofore made to be valid for all purposes.—And whereas from time to time divers prisoners have been removed from one of Her Majesty's colonies to another, and doubts have been entertained whether such removals were legal, and how far such prisoners could be legally dealt with in the colonies to which they have been removed, and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed: Be it enacted as follows: The removal of any prisoner heretofore made from one colony to another by or under the authority of the governor of either of such colonies, and any act done in relation to such removal by or under such authority, and the detention, custody, and treatment in either colony of the prisoner so removed, shall be deemed to have been as lawful and effectual for all purposes whatsoever as if this Act had been passed at the time of such removal, and had been in force in respect of both the colonies referred to in this section, and such removal had been duly made in pursuance of this act.

CUSTOMS AND INLAND REVENUE DUTIES ACT.

31 & 32 VICT. CAP. 14.

An Act to grant certain Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue, and to repeal and alter other Duties of Customs and Inland Revenue.—[24th June, 1869.]

Most gracious Sovereign,

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, in Parliament assembled, towards raising the necessary supplies to defray your Majesty's public expenses and making an addition to the public revenue, have freely and voluntarily resolved to give and grant unto your Majesty the several duties hereinafter mentioned; and do therefore most humbly beseech your Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

PART I.

As to Customs.

1. Grants of duties of customs in Schedule (A.)
2. Eau de Cologne charged per gallon instead of per flask.
3. Extracts of malt admissible in transit, &c.
4. Repeal of duties on corn, &c.

PART II.

As to Income Tax, Land Tax, and Inhabited House Duty.

SECT. 5.—Grant of duties of income-tax specified in Schedule (B.)

—There shall be charged, collected, and paid, for the use of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, the duties of income-tax specified in Schedule (B.) to this Act; and all the provisions contained in any act relating to the duties of income-tax, and in force on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and not repealed by this act, shall have as full force and effect with respect to the said duties of income-tax granted by this act, so far as the same shall be consistent with the provisions of this act, as if the same had been herein expressly enacted with reference to the said duties so granted; and for the purposes of this act the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, mentioned in the forty-third section of the act passed in the twenty-fifth year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-two, shall be read as and deemed to mean the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

6. The sums assessed to the income-tax under Schedules (A.) and (B.) of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34, for the year 1868, to be taken as the annual value for assessment under this act.—The sum charged as the annual value or amount of any property, profits, or gains in the several and respective assessments of income-tax made in pursuance of the act passed in the thirtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-three under Schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively of the act passed in the sixteenth and seventeenth years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter thirty-four, for the year ended on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, shall (except in cases for which other provisions is made by the acts relating to income-tax) be taken as the annual value or amount of such property, profits, or gains respectively for the year commencing on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine; and the duties of income-tax granted by this act and chargeable under the said schedules respectively, shall be computed, assessed, and charged according to such annual value or amount; and the commissioners executing the income-tax acts shall, for each place within their several and respective districts, cause duplicates of the assessments of the said duties, so computed, assessed, and charged under the said Schedules (A.) and (B.) for the said last-mentioned year, to be made out and delivered, together with the warrants for collecting the same; and in England the said commissioners shall appoint such persons, being inhabitants of the place to which the duplicate shall relate, as they the said commissioners shall think fit to be collectors of the duties thereby charged, in like manner as if such person had been presented to them by assessors under the acts now in force: provided always, that the said assessment shall be subject to be increased in like manner as the assessments made for the year ended on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and subject also to be abated or discharged at the end of the year commencing on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, for any cause allowed by the said acts; provided, that whenever it shall appear that any property, profits, or gains chargeable under the said Schedules (A.) and (B.) respectively have not been charged by the assessments made for the year ended on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, such property, profits, and gains shall be assessed to the duties of income-tax granted by this act under the provisions of the said several acts applicable thereto.

7. Assessors not to be appointed for duties under Schedules (A.) and (B.)—No assessors shall be appointed for the duties payable under the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), but the inspectors or surveyors of taxes shall act as assessors in respect of such duties whenever it shall be necessary; and in lieu of the poundage granted by the one hundred and eighty-third section of the act of the fifth and sixth years of Her Majesty, chapter thirty-five, to be divided between the assessors and collectors in regard to the duties which shall be collected under the said Schedules (A.) and (B.), there shall be paid a poundage of three halfpence to the collectors of the said duties.

8. Repeal of provisions requiring land-tax, inhabited house duty, and certain duties of income-tax to be paid quarterly.—The same to be payable every year on or before the 1st January.—The provisions made by any of the several acts relating to the land-tax or the duties on inhabited houses for the collection and payment of the land-tax or the said duties in quarterly payments or instalments are hereby repealed; and the provisions made by any act relating to the duties of income-tax for the collection and payment in quarterly instalments of the said last-mentioned duties, except such as are payable by way of deduction, or are assessable in respect of railways, are also hereby repealed: And the land-tax assessed in England for the year from the twenty-fifth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine and ending on the twenty-fifth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and the duties on inhabited houses assessed in England for the year commencing on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and ending on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and the duties of income-tax, except such as are payable by way of deduction or are assessable as aforesaid, assessed in England or Ireland for the year commencing and ending as last mentioned, shall be payable on or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy; and the land-tax, and the duties on inhabited houses, and the duties of income-tax (except as aforesaid), in every assessment in England for every year subsequent to the twenty-fifth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, or the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, as the case may be, and the said duties of income-tax (except as aforesaid) in assessment in Ireland for every year subsequent to the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, shall be payable on or before the first day of January in each year.

9. Collectors to account for duties after the 1st day of January in every year.—The collectors of the said land-tax and duties shall pay or account for the same to the proper officer for receipt on the day to be appointed for the receipt of the said land-tax and duties next after the first day of January in every year.

10. Delivery of schedules of arrears.—Any schedule of arrears of the said land-tax or duties delivered at any receipt as aforesaid shall have the like force and effect as if delivered at the time or times appointed by the act passed in the forty-eighth year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter one hundred and forty one, for the delivery of such schedules.

11. Exemption from inhabited house duties of trade premises under care of servant only.—From and after the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, any tenement or part of a tenement occupied as a house for the purposes of trade only, or as a warehouse for the sole purpose of lodging goods, wares or merchandise therein, or as a shop or counting-house, or being used as a shop or counting-house, shall be exempt from inhabited house duties, although a servant or other person may dwell in such tenement or part of a tenement for the protection thereof.

PART III.

As to Duty on Fire Insurances.

12. Repeal of the percentage duty on fire insurances.—On the twenty-fifth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, the stamp duty at the rate of one shilling and sixpence per centum per annum now payable for and in respect of insurances against loss or damage by fire only shall cease and determine; and the several acts and parts of acts specified in the schedule marked (C.) to this act are hereby repealed, save so far as respects any insurance made or renewed prior to the twenty-fifth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and as respects any forfeiture or penalty incurred in respect of any offence against any enactment so repealed.

13. Provision as to return of part of percentage duty in certain cases.—Where any insurance against loss or damage by fire only may have been or shall be made or renewed after the twelfth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and before the twenty-fifth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, for any period extending beyond the last-mentioned day, so much of the stamp duty at the rate of one shilling and sixpence per centum per annum paid for such insurance as may have been so paid in respect of any time subsequent to the twenty-fourth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine shall, upon proof made of the truth of the facts, be allowed and returned.

PART IV.

As to the Duties on Tea Licences.

14. Repeal of excise licence for sale of tea, &c.—From and after the fifth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, it shall not be necessary for any person trading in or selling coffee, tea, cocoanuts, chocolate or pepper, to take out an excise licence for that purpose; and from and after the said day the enactments specified in Schedule (D.) to this act annexed shall be repealed, save as to any duties or penalties that may have been incurred previous thereto.

15. Provision as to right of grocers in Ireland.—With reference to the fourth section of the act passed in the sixth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter eighty-one, all persons who shall deal in or sell coffee, tea, cocoanuts, chocolate or pepper in Ireland, shall have the same rights, and be subject and liable to the same regulations, forfeitures, and penalties, as they would have had and been subject and liable to if this act had not been passed, and they had been licensed under the said act to deal in or sell any of the articles aforesaid.

Cap. 14.

Cap. 14.

PART V.

As to Assessed Taxes and Excise Licences.

16. Repeal of certain duties of assessed taxes.—The duties of assessed taxes now payable in Great Britain shall cease to be assessed in respect of male servants, carriages, horses, mares, geldings, mules, hair powder, and armorial bearings or ensigns employed, kept, used, or worn respectively after the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine in England, and after the twenty-fourth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine in Scotland, and on persons using or exercising the trade and business of horsedealers after such days respectively; but all enactments as to the said duties shall remain in full force and effect as to all assessments of the said duties or any of them made or which ought to be made in England for the year commencing on the sixth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and in Scotland for the year commencing on the twenty-fifth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in respect of male servants, carriages, horses, mares, geldings, mules, hair powder, and armorial bearings or ensigns employed, kept, used, or worn respectively after the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight in England, or after the twenty-fourth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight in Scotland, and on persons using or exercising the trade and business of horsedealers after such last-mentioned days respectively, and as to any arrears of or penalties incurred in relation to the said duties, or any of them, for any year.

17. Repeal of certain duties of excise, viz.: Licences to let horses in Great Britain—Licences to let post horses in Ireland—Hackney carriage licences and duties—Stage carriage licences and duties.—On the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy the following duties of excise shall cease to be payable, viz.:

The duties upon licences to be taken out by persons who shall let horses for hire in Great Britain;

The duties upon licences to let to hire horses for the purpose of travelling post by the mile or from stage to stage in Ireland;

The duties upon licences to keep, use, and let to hire hackney carriages within the limits of the metropolitan police district and the city of London, and also the weekly duties payable in respect of such hackney carriages;

The duties upon licences to keep, use, and employ stage carriages in Great Britain, and also the mileage duty payable in respect of such stage carriages;

but all enactments as to the said duties respectively shall remain in full force and effect as to any of the said duties which shall be owing or in arrear on the said day, and as to any offences which shall have been committed against any of the said enactments previous thereto.

18. New duties of excise granted—Duties to be excise duties, and to be under the management of Commissioners of Inland Revenue.—On and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy there shall be granted, charged, levied, and paid, for the use of Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in and throughout Great Britain, under and subject to the provisions and regulations in this act contained, the following duties, that is to say:

For every male servant	0	15	0
For every carriage—
If such carriage shall have four or more wheels, and shall be of the weight of four hundred weight or upwards	2	2	0
If such carriage shall have less than four wheels, or, having four or more wheels, shall be of a less weight than four hundredweight	0	15	0
For every horse or mule	0	10	6
For armorial bearings—
If such armorial bearings shall be painted, marked, or affixed on or to any carriage	2	2	0
If such armorial bearings shall not be so painted, marked, or affixed, but shall be otherwise worn or used	1	1	0
For every horsedealer	12	10	0

And such duties respectively shall be paid annually upon licences to be taken out under the provisions of this act by the person who shall employ the servant, or shall keep the carriage, or horse or mule, or shall wear or use the armorial bearings, or shall exercise or carry on the trade of a horsedealer.

And such duties and licences shall be excise duties and licences, and shall be under the management of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and, subject to the provisions of this act, all the powers, clauses, regulations, and directions contained in any act relating to excise duties or licences, or to penalties under excise acts, and now or hereafter in force, shall respectively be of full force and effect with respect to the duties, and the licences under this act and the penalties hereby imposed, so far as the same are applicable and consistent with the provisions of this act, as fully and effectually as if the same had been herein specially enacted with reference to the said last-mentioned duties, licences, and penalties respectively; and the said licences shall be in such form and shall be granted by such officer as the said commissioners shall direct, and shall be dated on the day of granting the same, and shall expire on the thirty-first day of December then next following.

19. Provisions and regulations to be observed.—The provisions and regulations contained in this section shall be observed, viz.:

(1.) It shall not be necessary for any member of the Royal Family to make any declaration or to take out any licence under this act, nor shall it be necessary for the sheriff of any county, or mayor or other officer in any corporation or royal burgh serving an annual office therein, to take out a licence for any servants, carriages, or horses employed or kept by him for the purposes of his office during his year of service, nor for any person who shall by right of office wear or use any of the arms or any insignia of any member of the Royal Family, or of any corporation or royal burgh, to take out a licence in respect of the use of such arms or insignia:

(2.) It shall not be necessary for any person ordinarily residing in Ireland, and being a representative Peer on the part of Ireland or a member of the House of Commons, and not residing in Great Britain longer than during the session of Parliament, and forty days before and forty days after the session, or for any person ordinarily residing in Ireland and residing in Great Britain by the order or direction of the Lord Lieutenant for the time being or of his chief secretary, for the purpose of public business, to make any declaration or to take out any licence under this act in respect of any servants, carriages, horses or mules, or armorial bearings employed, kept, or used by him, save in respect of any subject matter of duty which shall be employed, kept, or used by such person in Great Britain during his residence in Ireland.

As to Male Servants.

(3.) The term "male servant" means and includes any male servant employed either wholly or partially in any of the following capacities; that is to say, maitre d'hôtel, house steward, master of the horse, groom of the chambers, valet de chambre, butler, under butler, clerk of the kitchen, confectioner, cook, house porter, footman, page, waiter, coachman, groom, postilion, stable boy or helper, in the stables, gardener, under gardener, park keeper, gamekeeper, under gamekeeper, huntsman, and whipper-in, or in any capacity involving the duties of any of the above descriptions of servants, by whatever style the person acting in such capacity may be called:

(4.) Every person who shall furnish any male servant on hire shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be the employer of such servant:

(5.) It shall not be necessary for licences to be taken out in the following cases, viz.:

By any officer in Her Majesty's army or navy for any servant, being a soldier in the army or a person actually borne upon the books of a ship, and employed by such officer in accordance with the regulations of Her Majesty's service:

By any licensed retailer of exciseable liquors or licensed keeper of a refreshment house for any servant employed by him solely for the purposes of his business, such servant being the only male servant employed by him:

By any person who shall have made entry of his premises in accordance with section twenty-eight of this act for any servant employed by him at such premises in the course of his trade, other than a servant employed to drive a carriage with any horse let to hire for any period exceeding twenty-eight days; provided that such person shall have complied with all the provisions contained in the said section.

By any person duly licensed by proper authority to keep or use any public stage or hackney carriage for any servant necessarily employed by him to drive such stage or hackney carriage, or in the care of such stage or hackney carriage or of the horse or horses kept and used by him to draw the same.

As to Carriages.

(6.) The term "carriage" means and includes any vehicle drawn by a horse or mule, or horses or mules, except a waggon, cart, or other vehicle used solely for the conveyance of any goods or burden in the course of trade or husbandry, and whereon the Christian name and surname and place of abode or place of business of the owner or the name or style and principal or only place of business of the company or firm owning the same shall be visibly and legibly painted in letters of not less than one inch in length.

(7.) Every person who shall let any carriage for hire shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be the person keeping such carriage.

As to Horses and Mules.

(8.) The term "horse" means and includes a horse or pony of any sex or description or age, except a foal, colt, or filly which shall never have been used for any purpose of draught or riding; and the term "mule" includes only such mule as shall have been at any time used for any purpose of draught or riding.

(9.) Every person who shall let any horse or mule for hire shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be the person keeping the same.

Cap. 14.

Cap. 14.

(10.) Any officer (not being commandant) and any member of the yeomanry or volunteer force required to use, and who shall have used, his horse on duty, and any person who shall have gratuitously furnished any horse which shall have been used on duty by any such officer or member as aforesaid, or for conveying any gun or any waggon or other military carriage in the service of the yeomanry or volunteer force, shall be entitled, after the expiration of any year ending on the thirty-first of December, to repayment of the duty paid by him for any licence in respect of any horse so used as aforesaid during such year; provided that upon any claim being made for repayment of duty, such affidavits and certificates as are mentioned in the eleventh section of the Act passed in the forty-fourth year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter fifty-four, and the forty-second section of the act passed in the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter sixty-five, respectively, and are applicable to the particular claim, shall be produced by the person applying for repayment; and provided that such affidavits and certificates respectively shall have reference to the use of any such horse for a year ending on the thirty-first of December.

(11.) Any field officer, adjutant, musketry instructor, or surgeon of a regiment of militia who shall be returned in the manner required by law as effective shall be entitled after the expiration of any year to repayment of the duty paid for a licence in respect of any horse used for the service of the militia in such year; provided that any application for repayment shall be accompanied by a certificate duly signed in the following form:

"I, _____, commanding officer of the regiment of militia, do hereby certify that _____ was a _____ commissioned and serving in the said regiment as an effective member thereof, and that he kept one horse for the service of the militia in the year ended on the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and _____."

(12.) It shall not be necessary for licences to be taken out in the following cases; viz.

By any officer serving in any of Her Majesty's regular forces for any horse or horses required by the regulations of the service to be kept by him;

By any effective officer commanding a volunteer corps for any number of horses not exceeding two kept by such officer for service in such corps;

By any person for any horse or mule kept by him solely for the purpose of husbandry or use in his business of a market gardener, and which shall not be used for riding or for drawing any carriage for the keeping or using of which a licence is required by this act;

By any person in respect of any mare which shall be kept for the sole purpose of breeding;

By any person for any horse or mule used solely by him in any underground mine;

By any horsedealer duly licensed under this act for any horse or mule, being his property and kept on his premises for sale, and which shall not be let for hire;

By any person for any horse for which duty has been previously paid as a racehorse for the same year.

As to Armorial Bearings.

(13.) "Armorial bearings" means and includes any armorial bearing, crest, or ensign, by whatever name the same shall be called, and whether such armorial bearing, crest, or ensign shall be registered in the College of Arms or not.

(14.) Any person who shall keep any carriage, whether owned or hired by him, shall be deemed to wear and use any armorial bearings painted or marked thereon or affixed thereto.

(15.) It shall not be necessary for a licence to be taken out by any person duly licensed by proper authority to keep or use any public stage or hackney carriage for any armorial bearings painted or marked on such stage or hackney carriage.

20. Notice to be affixed on or near the church door as to duties and declarations under this act.—On or before the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, and on or before the first day of January in every subsequent year, the said commissioners shall cause to be placed upon or near to the door of every church in Great Britain a printed or written notice setting forth the duties payable upon licences required to be taken out under this act, and stating from whom forms of declaration under this act can be obtained by persons residing within the parish in which the church is situated, and to whom the declarations when filled up and signed are to be delivered, and the duties paid, and by whom the licences are to be granted, and every such notice shall be kept affixed upon or near to the door of such church for such time as the commissioners shall direct; provided that the liability of any person to fill up, sign, and deliver any declaration, or to pay duties and take out licences, shall not be affected, nor shall any proceeding of any kind nor any act done by any person in pursuance of this act be deemed to be invalid or unlawful, by reason of such notice not having been placed or kept affixed as aforesaid.

21. Commissioners to provide forms of declaration.—The said commissioners shall cause to be prepared and issued to every person applying for the same such forms of declarations and books of account as may be required for carrying out the purposes of this act.

22. Persons keeping servants, &c., to make declarations.—Every person employing any male servant, or keeping any carriage, horse, or mule, or wearing or using any armorial bearings, or exercising or carrying on the trade of a horsedealer, shall fill up and sign a declaration in the prescribed form wherein shall be stated the following particulars; viz.,

The number of male servants employed by him, and in what capacity:

The number of carriages kept by him, and the number of wheels of each carriage, and also whether any carriage having four or more wheels shall weigh less than four hundredweight:

The number of horses and mules kept by him:

Whether he wears or uses armorial bearings, and, if so, whether the same are painted, marked, or affixed on any carriage kept by him:

The number of male servants or carriages or horses or mules hired by him, with the name and address of the person from whom he shall have hired the same:

And, if he exercises or carries on the trade of a horsedealer, state at what place or places, and the number of horses and mules kept by him otherwise than for sale:

And also such further particulars as the said commissioners may, by the form of declaration, require to be therein stated.

And if a licence is unnecessary in respect of any of the above particulars under the provisions and regulations of this act, the declaration shall contain a further statement showing—

In what respect, and upon what ground, the licence is unnecessary.

And such person shall deliver the declaration so filled up and signed by him, and shall pay the duties to which he shall by such declaration appear to be liable to the person or persons named therein as the person or persons appointed to receive such declaration and duties respectively, before the expiration of the month of January in each year, or before the expiration of twenty-one days from the day of his commencing to employ any servant, or to keep or use any carriage, horse, or mule, or to wear or use any armorial bearings, or to exercise or carry on the trade of a horsedealer.

23. Additional declaration to be made, and further duties paid when required.—Whenever any person who shall have delivered a declaration under the preceding section shall become liable to further duties by reason of his employing a greater number of male servants, or keeping a greater number of carriages, horses, or mules, than he shall have returned in such declaration, or by reason of any change in the character of any carriage kept by him, or in the mode of wearing or using armorial bearings, he shall fill up and sign an additional declaration, specifying with reference to such liability, the particulars required by the said preceding section, and shall deliver such additional declaration so filled up and signed, and pay such further duties as by such last-mentioned declaration shall appear to be payable by him to the person or persons named therein as the person or persons appointed to receive such declaration and duties respectively, before the expiration of twenty-one days from the day of his becoming so liable as aforesaid: provided that when payment shall be made of further duty by reason of any change in the character of any carriage, or in the mode of wearing or using armorial bearings the duties already paid in respect of the carriage or armorial bearings shall be allowed and repaid.

24. Special notice requiring declaration may be served on any person.—The said commissioners may direct a special notice to be served upon any person, requiring such person to fill up, sign, and deliver to the officer named in such notice a form of declaration to be left with such notice stating whether such person is liable to the payment of any of the duties imposed by this act or not, and also the several particulars required by section twenty-two of this act, so far as the same shall be applicable, and to pay the duties with which he shall appear by such declaration to be chargeable to the person named therein within fourteen days from the date of the service of such special notice.

25. Penalty for neglect to deliver declaration, or for delivering an untrue declaration.—Every person who shall neglect or refuse to deliver any declaration in conformity with the provisions of this act, and every person who shall deliver a declaration wherein the particulars required by this act to be therein set forth shall not be fully and truly stated, shall forfeit the penalty of twenty pounds, and that over and above any duties to which he may be liable.

26. Licences to be granted for duties paid.—Any person appointed to grant licences shall grant and deliver to every person who shall pay to him any duties a licence or licences under this act, in which licence or licences shall be specified the particulars of the duties paid, the year for which the duties shall be paid, with any other particulars the said commissioners may direct; and no licence shall be granted except upon payment of the full duties imposed by this act, nor shall any licence granted under this act be transferred to any person other than the widow of the person to whom such licence shall have been originally granted, or to his executors or administrators, or to his assignees in bankruptcy.

27. Penalty for not taking out licence—Penalty not recoverable where duties are paid within time prescribed.—Every person who shall employ any male servant, or keep any carriage, horse, or mule, or wear or use any armorial bearings, or exercise or carry on the trade of a horsedealer, without having a proper licence under this act, and every person who shall employ a greater number of male servants, or shall keep a greater number of carriages, horses, or mules, than he shall be authorised to employ or keep by any licence or licences granted under this act, or shall wear or use armorial bearings otherwise than as authorised by any such licence, shall forfeit the penalty of twenty pounds over and above any other penalty to which such person may be liable; provided that such penalty shall not be recoverable where the defendant in any proceeding for the recovery of the same shall prove to the satisfaction of the justices before whom such proceeding shall be depending that he had delivered a declaration, and paid the proper duties, and obtained a proper licence, within the time prescribed by this act; provided also, that if in any proceeding for recovery of the said penalty any question shall arise as to the number of servants employed, or the number of carriages, horses, or mules kept or used, or the weight of any carriage kept or used, by the defendant, or whether the defendant was entitled to any exemption from licence under the provisions and regulations contained in this act, the burden of proving the number or weight, or right to exemption, as the case may be, shall lie upon the defendant.

Cap. 14.

Cap. 14.

28. Persons who carry on certain trades may enter their premises, and shall then paint their names, &c. thereon.—Every person who exercises or carries on the trade of a horsedealer or of a livery-stable keeper, or who lets any horse for hire, or who keeps any horse to be used for drawing any public stage or hackney carriage, may, if he shall think fit, deliver to an officer of inland revenue acting in the parish or place in which his premises are situated an entry in writing, signed by such person, containing a description of the premises and of the purpose for which he uses or intends to use them; and every person who shall have delivered any such entry shall cause to be legibly painted upon some conspicuous part of the premises so entered, or upon a board affixed thereto, his Christian name and surname, with the addition of such other words as shall denote the particular trade or business, or trades or businesses (if more than one), carried on by him; and such person shall also allow any officer of inland revenue at any reasonable time to inspect the entered premises; and if any person who shall have delivered any such entry as aforesaid shall neglect to comply with the provisions of this section, or any of them, he shall forfeit a penalty of twenty pounds.

29. Livery stable keepers and other persons to keep books of account containing certain particulars.—Every livery stable keeper shall from time to time enter in a book an account of every carriage, horse, and mule standing at livery or otherwise on his premises, with the Christian name and surname and place of abode of the person to whom such carriage, horse, or mule shall belong. And every person who shall furnish any servant on hire, or let any carriage, horse, or mule for hire to be kept away from his premises, shall from time to time enter in a book an account of every such servant, carriage, horse, or mule, with the name of such servant, the number of wheels of such carriage, and the name and address of the person hiring such servant, carriage, horse, or mule; and all such books shall at all reasonable times in the daytime be open to the inspection of any officer of inland revenue, who shall have power to make any extract therefrom; and any person who shall neglect or refuse to do any act or thing required to be done by this section, or who shall prevent or obstruct any officer of inland revenue in the exercise of any duty or power imposed upon or vested in him by this section shall forfeit the penalty of twenty pounds.

30. Recovery of duties.—If any person who shall have delivered any declaration under this act shall not within the time prescribed in that behalf have paid the duties appearing by such declaration to be payable by him, the officer of inland revenue acting in the parish or place wherein he shall reside or shall carry on business shall serve such person with a notice, requiring him, within seven days from the date thereof, to pay the duties according to such declaration; and upon neglect or refusal to pay such duties it shall be lawful for the collector, or person acting as collector, of inland revenue, within whose collection the parish or place in which such person shall reside or carry on business shall be situate, upon receiving from the said officer a certificate of such neglect or refusal, to issue his warrant to any officer of inland revenue to distrain such person by his goods and chattels; and such warrant shall have the same force and effect as the levy warrant referred to in the Excise Act of the seventh and eighth year of King George the Fourth, chapter fifty-three, section eighty-nine, and the distress so taken shall be kept for the space of four days at the costs and charges of the person so distrained; and if the said person shall not pay the duties, together with the costs and charges within the said four days, then the distress shall be sold and the proceeds of sale shall be applied in satisfaction of the duties and the costs and charges of taking, keeping, and selling the said distress, and the surplus (if any) shall be handed over to the person distrained; and where for the purpose of distraining it shall be necessary to break open the door of any house the officer shall distrain in the presence of a police or other constable; and where no sufficient distress can or may be found, then and in every such case any two of the said commissioners are hereby authorised by warrant under their hands to commit the defaulter to the common gaol or house of correction for the place where such defaulter shall be arrested, there to be kept until payment shall be made or he shall be released by order of the said commissioners; and any warrant of distress or commitment issued by virtue of this act may be in the form given in Schedule (F.) to this act, and may be executed in any part of the United Kingdom.

31. Assignee to pay duties owing by bankrupt.—When any person against whom a warrant of distress shall have been issued as directed in the preceding section shall be or shall have become bankrupt, so that a levy upon his goods and chattels cannot be made, the assignee, or other person in whom the estate of the said bankrupt shall be vested by operation of law, shall, out of any moneys that may be in or come to his hands in respect of the bankrupt's estate, pay to the said commissioners for the use of Her Majesty, the amount of duties for which the said warrant of distress shall have been issued.

32. What shall be service of notice and summons.—Every notice to be served under the provisions of this act, and every summons upon any information for recovery of a penalty imposed by this act, may be served personally or left at the usual or last known place of abode of the person to be served.

33. Licences to be produced when required—Penalty.—If any person who shall have taken out a licence or licences under this act shall not produce and deliver such licence or licences to be examined and read by any officer of inland revenue within a reasonable time after such officer shall request the production of the same, he shall forfeit the penalty of five pounds.

34. Commissioners to repay one-fourth part of the amount paid for post horse licences.—The said commissioners shall, on and after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, repay to any person who shall have taken out a licence to let horses for hire in Great Britain expiring on the fifth day of April, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, a sum of money equal to one-fourth part of the annual amount payable in respect of such licence.

35. Stage carriage licences expiring on first Sunday in November, 1869, to continue in force until 31st December following.—Whereas certain licences to keep, use, and employ stage carriages will, under the laws now in force, expire on the first Sunday in the month of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine: Be it enacted, that all such licences shall continue in force until the thirty-first day of December next following; and the holders of such licences shall respectively be liable to and chargeable with the payment of the same rate and amount of duties as are chargeable upon them according to the terms of such licences until and inclusive of the said thirty-first day of December.

36. Provisions as to duty to be paid on hackney carriages in the last week of the year.—Whereas the duty in respect of hackney carriages licensed within the metropolitan police district is a weekly duty and imposed by the week, including and ending on a Sunday, and the said duty is by this act to cease on Saturday, the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy: Be it enacted, that the duty payable in respect of every such hackney carriage for the week commencing on Monday, the twenty-seventh day of December next, shall be the sum of five shillings.

37. Provision for payment of duty on carriages let for hire under existing contracts.—In the case of any contract made before the passing of this act for the hire of any carriage for a period of a year or upwards, it shall be lawful for the person letting such carriage and he is hereby empowered to add the amount of duty paid by him from time to time under the provisions of this act in respect of such carriage to the sum agreed to be paid for the hire thereof under any such contract, and to recover such duty from the hirer of such carriage.

38. Provision as to certain shepherd's dogs with reference to 30 Vict. c. 5.—In the case of a person following the calling and occupation of a shepherd, and keeping a dog solely for the purpose or in the exercise of such calling and occupation, the hirer or employer of the shepherd shall, so far as respects the liability to the duty imposed by the act of the thirtieth Victoria, chapter five, be deemed to be the person keeping such dog: Provided always, that the licence for any such dog shall be granted in the name of the shepherd, who shall after the granting thereof be deemed to be the person licensed to keep the dog within the meaning of the said act.

39. Repeal of enactments in Schedule (E).—The several acts and parts of acts specified in Schedule (E.) to this act are hereby repealed, save as mentioned in the sixteenth and seventeenth sections of this act.

SCHEDULE (A.)

CONTAINING THE DUTIES OF CUSTOMS GRANTED BY THIS ACT.

Continuation of Duty on Tea.

The duties of customs now charged on tea shall continue to be levied and charged,—

Cap. 17

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 17.

An Act for the Preservation of Sea Birds.—[24th June, 1869.]

Whereas the sea birds of the United Kingdom have of late years greatly decreased in number; it is expedient therefore to provide for their protection during the breeding season:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same:

Section 1. Definition of terms.—That the words "sea birds" shall for all the purposes of this act be deemed to include the different species of auk, Bonxie, Cornish chough, coulteneb, diver, eider duck, fulmar, gannet, grebe, guillemot, gull, kittiwake, loon, marrot, merganser, murre, oyster catcher, petrel, puffin, razor-bill, scot, seamew, sea parrot, sea swallow, shearwater, sheldrake, skua, smew, solan goose, tarrock, tern, tystey, and willock; the word "sheriff" shall include steward and also sheriff substitute and steward substitute.

2. Season during which sea birds shall not be killed—Penalty.—Any person who shall kill, wound, or attempt to kill or wound, or take any sea bird, or use any boat, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for the purpose of killing, wounding, or taking any sea bird, or shall have in his control or possession any sea bird recently killed, wounded, or taken, between the first day of April and the first day of August in any year, shall, on conviction of any such offence before any justice or justices of the peace in England or Ireland, or before the sheriff or any justice or justices of the peace in Scotland, forfeit and pay for every such sea bird so killed, wounded, or taken, or so in his possession, such sum of money not exceeding one pound as to the said justices or sheriff shall seem meet, together with the costs of the conviction; provided always, that this section shall not apply where the said sea bird is a young bird unable to fly.

3. Home Office, &c. on application of justices, may vary such period.—The Home Office as to Great Britain, and the Lord Lieutenant as to Ireland, may, upon application of the justices in quarter sessions assembled of any county on the sea coast, extend or vary the time during which the killing, wounding, and taking of sea birds is prohibited by this act; the extension or variation of such time by the Home Office shall be made by order under the hand of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; after the making of which order the penalties imposed by this act shall in such county apply only to offences committed during the time specified in such order; and the extension of such time by the Lord Lieutenant shall be made by order to be published in the Dublin Gazette, and a copy of the London Gazette or Dublin Gazette containing such order shall be evidence of the same having been made.

4. Persons offending against this act may be required to tell their names and abodes.—Penalty for refusing.—Where any person shall be found offending against this act, it shall be lawful for any person to require the person so offending to give his Christian name, surname, and place of abode; and in case the person offending shall, after being so required, refuse to give his real name or place of abode, or give an untrue name or place of abode, he shall be liable, on being convicted of any such offence before a justice of the peace or the sheriff, to forfeit and pay, in addition to the penalties imposed by section two, such sum of money not exceeding two pounds as to the convicting justice, or sheriff shall seem meet, together with the costs of the conviction.

5. Application of penalty.—One moiety of every penalty or forfeiture under this act shall go and be paid to the person who shall inform and prosecute for the same, and the other moiety shall, in England, be paid to some one of the overseers of the poor, or to some other officer (as the convicting justice or justices may direct), of the parish, township, or place in which the offence shall have been committed, to be by such overseer or officer paid over to the use of the general rate of the county, riding, or division in which such parish, township, or place shall be situate, whether the same shall or shall not contribute to such general rate; and, in Scotland, to the inspector of the poor of the parish in which the offence shall have been committed, to be by such inspector paid over to the use of the funds for the relief of the poor in such parish; and, if recovered in Ireland, such penalty shall be applied, according to the provisions of the Fines Act (Ireland), 1851, or any act amending the same.

6. As to trial of offences committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction.—All offences mentioned in this act, which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, shall be deemed to be offences of the same nature and liable to the same punishments as if they had been committed upon any land in the United Kingdom, and may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, and determined in any county or place in the United Kingdom in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if they had been actually committed in that county or place; and in any information or conviction for any such offence the offence may be averred to have been committed "on the high seas;" and in Scotland any offence committed against this act on the sea coast, or at sea beyond the ordinary jurisdiction of any sheriff or justice of the peace, shall be held to have been committed in any county abutting on such sea coast, or adjoining such sea, and may be tried and punished accordingly.

7. Where offences committed on boundary waters, prosecutions may be in either county.—Where any offence under this act is committed in or upon any waters forming the boundary between any two counties, districts of quarter sessions or petty sessions, such offence may be prosecuted before any justice or justices of the peace or sheriff in either of such counties or districts.

8. Extent of act.—The operation of this act shall not extend to the Island of Saint Kilda.

9. Power to Her Majesty, by Order in Council, to exempt parts from operation of act.—It shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by an Order in Council, where, on account of the necessities of the inhabitants of the more remote parts of the sea coasts of the United Kingdom, it shall appear desirable, from time to time to exempt any part or parts thereof from the operation of this act; and every such order shall assign the limits of such part or parts aforesaid within which such exemption shall have effect.

LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION ACT. AMENDMENT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 18.

An Act to amend the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.—
[24th June, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient that the provisions contained in "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," should be amended: Be it therefore enacted and declared by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Cost of arbitrations, where either party so requires, to be settled by a master of Superior Courts.—Where in England, under "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or any act incorporating the same, any question of disputed compensation is determined by arbitration, the costs of and incidental to the arbitration and award shall, if either party so requires, be taxed and settled as between the parties by any one of the taxing masters of the Superior Courts of law; and such fees may be taken in respect of the taxation as may be fixed in pursuance of the enactments relating to the fees to be demanded and taken in the offices of such masters, and all those enactments, including the enactments relating to the taking of fees, by means of stamps, shall extend to the fees in respect of the said taxation.

2. Repeal of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 33.—Section thirty-three of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, is hereby repealed, and any proceedings commenced in pursuance of that section may be continued under this act as if they had been commenced under it.

3. Provision respecting lands in Westminster.—Where any lands by the special act authorised to be taken, are situate within the city and liberty of Westminster, then, with respect to those lands, in every case in which any question of disputed compensation is required by "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," or any act amending the same, to be determined by the verdict of a jury, the high bailiff of the city and liberty of Westminster, or his deputy, shall be deemed to be substituted for the sheriff throughout such of the enactments of "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and any act amending the same as relate to the reference to a jury.

4. Short title—Construction of acts.—This act may be cited as "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1869," and shall be construed as one with "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts Amendment Act, 1860," and these acts and this act may be cited together as "The Lands Clauses Consolidation Acts, 1845, 1860, and 1869."

RECORDERS DEPUTIES ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 23.

Cap. 23. An Act to extend the Power of Recorders to appoint Deputies in certain Cases.—[12th July, 1869.]

Whereas by an act passed in the sixth and seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty, intitled "An Act to amend the Act for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," the recorders of boroughs having separate courts of quarter sessions are authorised and empowered, in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, to appoint deputies for the time being, and it is expedient to extend to recorders in the exercise, of their civil jurisdiction as judges of the local courts of record in such boroughs, or any of them, a similar power in like cases:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Power to recorders exercising jurisdiction as justices of local courts of record to appoint deputies in certain cases to act in such courts.—That the recorder of every borough in which, by charter, custom, or otherwise, there is or ought to be holden a court or courts of record for the trial of civil actions, of which court or courts the recorder is the judge, shall be and he is hereby empowered, in case of sickness or unavoidable absence, to appoint under his hand and seal a barrister of not less than five years standing as his deputy to act for him and in his stead as judge of the court or courts of record then next to be held, or then being held, and not longer or otherwise; and the recorder upon every occasion of the appointment of a deputy shall forthwith send to the Secretary of State for the Home Department a statement of the reason why such appointment has become necessary: Provided nevertheless, that such court or courts shall not be deemed to have been illegally held, nor the acts of such deputy invalidated, by reason of the cause of absence of the recorder not being deemed to be unavoidable within the meaning of this act.

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

NEWSPAPERS, PRINTERS, AND READING ROOMS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 24.

An Act to repeal certain Enactments relating to Newspapers, Pamphlets, and other Publications, and to Printers, Typefounders, and Reading Rooms.—[12th July, 1869.]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Acts and parts of acts in first schedule repealed, except as in second schedule.—The acts and parts of acts described in the first schedule to this act are hereby repealed, but the provisions of the said acts which are set out in the second schedule to this act shall continue in force in the same manner as if they were enacted in the body of this act; and this act shall not affect the validity or invalidity of anything already done or suffered, or any right or title already acquired or accrued, or any remedy or proceeding in respect thereof, and all such remedies and proceedings may be had and continued in the same manner as if this act had not passed.

Sect. 3. Name and residence of printers not required to be put to bank notes, bills, &c., or to any paper printed by authority of any public board or public office.—Nothing in the said act of the thirty-ninth year of King George the Third, chapter seventy-nine, or in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to require the name and residence of the printer to be printed upon any bank note, or bank post bill of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, upon any bill of exchange, or promissory note, or upon any bond or other security for payment of money, or upon any bill of lading, policy of insurance, letter of attorney, deed, or agreement, or upon any transfer or assignment of any public stocks, funds, or other securities, or upon any transfer or assignment of the stocks of any public corporation or company authorised or sanctioned by act of Parliament, or upon any dividend warrant of or for any such public or other stocks, funds, or securities, or upon any receipt for money or goods, or upon any proceeding in any court of law or equity, or in any inferior court, warrant, order, or other papers printed by the authority of any public board or public officer in the execution of the duties of their respective offices, notwithstanding the whole or any part of the said several securities, instruments, proceedings, matters, and things aforesaid shall have been or shall be printed.

6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76.

Sect. 19. Discovery of proprietors, printers, or publishers of newspapers may be enforced by bill, &c.—If any person shall file any bill in any court for the discovery of the name of any person concerned as printer, publisher, or proprietor of any newspaper, or of any matters relative to the printing or publishing of any newspaper, in order the more effectually to bring or carry on any suit or action for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of any slanderous or libellous matter contained in any such newspaper respecting such person, it shall not be lawful for the defendant to plead or demur to such bill, but such defendant shall be compellable to make the discovery required; provided always, that such discovery shall not be made use of as evidence or otherwise in any proceeding against the defendant, save only in that proceeding for which the discovery is made.

2 & 3 Vict. c. 12.

Sect. 2. Penalty upon printers for not printing their name and residence on every paper or book, and on persons publishing the same.—Every person who shall print any paper or book whatsoever which shall be meant to be published or dispersed, and who shall not print upon the front of every such paper, if the same shall be printed on one side only, or upon the first or last leaf of every paper or book which shall consist of more than one leaf, in legible characters, his or her name and usual place of abode or business, and every person who shall publish or disperse, or assist in publishing or dispersing, any printed paper or book on which the name and place of abode of the person printing the same shall not be printed as aforesaid, shall for every copy of such paper so printed by him or her forfeit a sum not more than five pounds: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to impose any penalty upon any person for printing any paper excepted out of the operation of the said act of the thirty-ninth year of King George the Third, chapter seventy-nine, either in the said act or by any act made for the amendment thereof.

Sect. 3. As to books or papers printed at the university presses.—In the case of books or papers printed at the University Press of Oxford or the Pitt Press of Cambridge, the printer, instead of printing his name thereon, shall print the following words, "Printed at the University Press, Oxford," or "The Pitt Press, Cambridge," as the case may be.

Sect. 4. No action for penalties to be commenced except in the name of the Attorney or Solicitor-General in England or the Queen's Advocate in Scotland.—Provided always, that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons whatsoever to commence, prosecute, enter, or file, or cause or procure to be commenced, prosecuted, entered, or filed, any action, bill, plaint, or information in any of Her Majesty's courts, or before any justice or justices of the peace, against any person or persons for the recovery of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture made or incurred or which may hereafter be incurred under the provisions of this act, unless the same be commenced, prosecuted, entered, or filed in the name of Her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General in that part of Great Britain called England, or Her Majesty's Advocate for Scotland (as the case may be respectively); and if any action, bill, plaint, or information shall be commenced, prosecuted, or filed in the name or names of any other person or persons than is or are in that behalf before mentioned, the same and every proceeding thereupon had are hereby declared and the same shall be null and void to all intents and purposes.

9 & 10 Vict. c. 33.

Sect. 1. Proceedings shall not be commenced unless in the name of the law officers of the Crown.—It shall not be lawful for any person or persons to commence, prosecute, enter, or file, or cause or procure to be commenced, prosecuted, entered, or filed, any action, bill, plaint, or information in any of Her Majesty's courts, or before any justice or justices of the peace, against any person or persons for the recovery of any fine which may hereafter be incurred under the provisions of the act of the thirty-ninth year of King George the Third, chapter seventy-nine, set out in this act unless the same be commenced, prosecuted, entered, or filed in the name of Her Majesty's Attorney-General or Solicitor-General in England or Her Majesty's Advocate in Scotland, and every action, bill, plaint, or information which shall be commenced, prosecuted, entered, or filed in the name or names of any other person or persons than is in that behalf before mentioned, and every proceeding thereupon had, shall be null and void to all intents and purposes.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 25.

An Act to amend the Act of the Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth Years of Victoria, Chapter Eighty-three, Section Nine, by extending the Age at which Orphan and Deserted Children may be kept out at Nurse.—[12th July, 1869.]

congregation or society or body of persons associated for religious purposes as a burial ground, whether in use or closed, all the provisions in the said recited act made applicable to a chapel, meeting-house, or other place of religious worship shall be applicable to such burial ground, and this act and the said recited act shall be construed as one act: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall in any way interfere with the Burial Acts.

BEERHOUSES, &c., ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 27.

Cap. 27. An Act to amend the Law for licensing Beerhouses, and to make certain Alterations with respect to the Sale by Retail of Beer, Cider, and Wine.—[12th July, 1869.]

11 Geo. 4. § 1 Will. 4. c. 64—4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85—3 & 4 Vict. c. 61—24 & 25 Vict. c. 21—26 & 27 Vict. c. 33—23 & 24 Vict. c. 27.—Whereas by the acts relating to the general sale of beer and cider by retail in England; (that is to say,)

- (1.) An Act of the Session of the last Year of the Reign of King George the Fourth and the First Year of the Reign of King William the Fourth, Chapter Sixty-four, intituled "An act to permit the general Sale of Beer and Cider by Retail in England;"
- (2.) An Act of the Session of the Fourth and Fifth Years of the Reign of King William the Fourth, Chapter Eighty-five, intituled "An Act to amend an Act passed in the first Year of his present Majesty, to permit the general Sale of Beer and Cider by Retail in England;"
- (3.) An Act of the Session of the Third and Fourth Years of the Reign of Her present Majesty, Chapter Sixty-one, intituled "An Act to amend the Acts relating to the general Sale of Beer and Cider by Retail in England;"
- (4.) An Act of the Session of the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Years of the Reign of Her present Majesty, Chapter Twenty-one, intituled "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain Duties of Excise and Stamps;"

provision is made for the grant of licences by the excise for the sale by retail of beer and cider upon the terms and conditions therein specified:

And whereas by an act of the session of the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter thirty-three, intituled "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain Duties of Inland Revenue, and to amend the Laws relating to the Inland Revenue," it is enacted, that any person who after the passing of that act has taken out an excise licence to sell strong beer in casks containing not less than four and a half gallons, or in not less than two dozen reputed quart bottles, at one time, to be drunk or consumed elsewhere than on his premises, may take out an additional licence on payment of the excise duties therein mentioned, and that the same shall authorise such person to sell beer in any less quantity and in any other manner than as aforesaid, but not to be drunk or consumed on the premises where sold, and that such additional licence shall be granted without the production of any certificate, or the possession of any other qualification than the licence therein first mentioned:

And whereas provision is made for the grant of licences by the excise for refreshment houses and for the sale of wine by retail, and for other purposes, by an act of the session of the twenty-third year of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter twenty-seven, intituled "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain Duties on Wine Licences and Refreshment Houses, and for regulating the licensing of Refreshment Houses, and the granting of wine licences:"

And whereas it is expedient to make better provision with regard to the granting of the licences hereinbefore mentioned, and for regulating the houses and shops in which beer, cider, and wine are sold by retail:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows; (that is to say,)

1. Application of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

2. Definition of "beer" and cider.—For the purposes of this act the term "beer" shall include ale and porter, and the term "cider" shall include perry.

3. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Wine and Beer-house Act, 1869."

4. Retail licences not to be granted without certificate granted under this act.—From and after the fifteenth of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, no licence or renewal of a licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, or any of such articles, under the provisions of any of the said recited acts shall (save as is in this act otherwise provided) be granted except upon the production and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate granted under this act.

Any licence granted or renewed in contravention of this enactment shall be void.

5. Certificates by whom to be granted.—Certificates under this act shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting held in pursuance of an act of the session of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter sixty-one, intituled "An Act to regulate the Granting of Licences to Keepers of Inns, Alehouses, and victualling Houses in England," or at some adjournment of such meeting held in pursuance of the said last-mentioned act: Provided that certificates for licences under the said acts of the twenty-third year of the reign of Her present Majesty, of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, and of the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh years of Her present Majesty, may be granted by justices at the special sessions for transferring licences.

Cap. 25.

6. Form of certificate.—A certificate under this act shall specify the name and address of the person thereby authorised to receive a licence, the description of licence or licences authorised to be granted to him, and whether such licence or licences is or are to be granted for the sale of beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on or off the premises, and the situation of the house or shop in respect of which such grant is authorised. It shall be in force for one year from the date of its being granted, and shall be in the form given in the first schedule hereto, or as near thereto as circumstances admit.

7. Notice of application.—Every person intending to apply to the justices for a certificate under this act shall, twenty-one days at least before he applies, give notice in writing of his intention to one of the overseers of the parish, township, or place in which the house or shop in respect of which his application is to be made is situate, and to some constable or peace officer acting within such parish, township, or place, and shall in such notice set forth his name and address, and a description of the licence or licences for which he intends to apply, and of the situation of the house or shop in respect of which the application is to be made; and in the case of a house or shop not theretofore licensed for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, such person shall also within the space of twenty-eight days before such application is made, cause a like notice to be affixed and maintained between the hours of ten in the morning and five in the afternoon of two consecutive Sundays on the door of such house or shop, and on the principal door or on one of the doors of the church or chapel of the parish or place in which such house or shop is situate, or, if there be no such church or chapel, on some other public and conspicuous place within such parish or place.

Where application is made to the justices for the grant of a certificate under this act by way of renewal only, notice in pursuance of this section shall not be requisite.

8. Provisions of 9 Geo. 4, c. 61 to apply to grants of certificates under this act.—All the provisions of the said act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth as to the terms upon which, and the manner in which, and the persons by whom, grants of licences are to be made by the justices at the said general annual licensing meeting, and as to appeal from any act of any justice, shall, so far as may be, have effect with regard to grants of certificates under this act, subject to this qualification, that no application for a certificate under this act in respect of a licence to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine not to be consumed on the premises shall be refused, except upon one or more of the following grounds, viz.:

- (1.) That the applicant has failed to produce satisfactory evidence of good character:
- (2.) That the house or shop in respect of which a licence is sought, or any adjacent house or shop owned or occupied by the person applying for a licence, is of a disorderly character, or frequented by thieves, prostitutes, or persons of bad character:
- (3.) That the applicant having previously held a licence for the sale of wine, spirits, beer, or cider, the same has been forfeited for his misconduct, or that he has through misconduct been at any time previously adjudged disqualified from receiving any such licence, or from selling any of the said articles:
- (4.) That the applicant, or the house in respect of which he applies, is not duly qualified as by law is required:

Where an application for any such last-mentioned certificate is refused on the ground that the house in respect of which he applies is not duly qualified as by law is required, the justices shall specify in writing to the applicant the grounds of their decision.

9. As to transfer of certificate.—A certificate may be transferred to a new tenant or occupant of any house or premises in respect of which a licence under any of the said recited acts shall have been granted before the commencement of this act, or in respect of which a certificate shall have been granted under this act, by the justices (or the majority of them) in petty sessions for any borough, county, division, or place within which such house or premises shall be situated, which transferred certificate shall be in force until the then next general annual licensing meeting or special sessions for transferring licences, as the case may be; and it shall be lawful for a new tenant or occupant of any such house or premises as aforesaid, without a certificate, to sell beer, cider, and wine until the then next petty sessions holden in and for the borough, county, division, or place in which such house or premises shall be situated.

10. As to renewal of licences in force in Middlesex and Surrey.—A licence in force at the time of the passing of this Act for premises situated in the county of Middlesex or of Surrey may be renewed without a certificate at any time prior to the first general annual licensing meeting held for such counties respectively after the passing of this act.

11. Penalty on forgery of certificate.—If any person forge, or tender knowing the same to have been forged, any certificate authorised to be granted by this act, he shall, on summary conviction before two or more justices, be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or, in the discretion of the justices before whom he is tried, to imprisonment for any period not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour. Any licence granted in pursuance of such forged certificate, shall be void, and any person making use of such forged certificate, knowing the same to have been forged, shall be disqualified from obtaining at any time thereafter a licence for the sale of beer, cider, or wine by retail under any of the said recited Acts.

Capl. 27.

12. Constables may enter on houses licensed to sell beer, &c., not to be consumed on the premises.—Constables and officers of police may at all times enter into and examine—

- (1.) Any house or shop in respect of which any person is licensed under any of the said recited acts to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine not to be consumed on the premises;
- (2.) Any house or shop in which any person is authorised by virtue of an additional licence under the said recited act of the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty to sell beer by retail;
- (3.) Any house or shop licensed for the sale of table beer under the act of the session of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of the reign of her present Majesty, chapter twenty-one;

In the same manner as if such house or shop were licensed for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on the premises; and if any such licensed person, or any servant or other person in his employ or by his direction, refuse to admit or do not admit any constable or officer demanding admittance to such house or shop, such licensed person shall be liable to the same penalties recoverable or to be enforced in the same manner in all respects as if he were licensed in respect of such house or shop to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on the premises, and had refused admittance to such constable or officer.

13. Proof of money passing not necessary to prove sale.—In any legal proceeding under any of the said recited acts it shall not be necessary in order to prove the sale of beer, cider, or wine in or upon any house or premises to prove the receipt or payment of any money in respect of such sale, but proof that any beer, cider, or wine was drunk or consumed in or upon such house or premises by any person other than the keeper of such house or premises, or some servant or inmate residing therein, shall be prima facie evidence of the sale of such beer, cider, or wine in or upon such house or premises.

14. In cases of illegal sale on neighbouring premises evidence need not be given of ownership of such premises.—In any proceeding in relation to any forfeiture or penalty alleged to be incurred by any person licensed to sell by retail beer, cider, or wine, not to be consumed on the premises, for having, with intent to evade the provisions of any Act of Parliament, taken or authorised or suffered any person to take any beer, cider, or wine out of or from the house or premises of such licensed person for the purpose of being for his benefit or profit drunk or consumed in any other house, or in any tent, shed, or other building, premises, or place, it shall not be necessary to prove that such last-mentioned house, tent, shed, building, premises, or place belonged to such licensed person, or was hired, used, or occupied by him, if proof be given to the satisfaction of the justices having cognizance of the case that such beer, cider, or wine was drunk or consumed therein or thereupon with intent to evade the provisions of any such act; and on such proof being given, such beer, cider, or wine shall be deemed to have been drunk or consumed on the premises of the said licensed person, and he shall be subject to the like penalties and forfeitures as if such beer, cider, or wine had been drunk or consumed in any house or on any premises licensed only for the sale thereof not to be consumed on the premises.

15. Penalty for selling beer or cider to be drunk at illegal times.—If any person suffer beer or cider to be drunk in his house at any time during which the house ought by law to be closed, he shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for each offence.

16. Persons present in houses open at illegal hours to be liable to penalties.—Where any person licensed under any of the said recited acts to sell beer, cider, or wine by retail, or any person licensed under the said act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, is convicted of keeping his house open for the sale of or of selling beer, cider, wine, spirits, or any other excisable liquor, or of suffering the same to be drunk in such house, at any time during which such house ought by law to be closed, any person (other than the servants or inmates of such house) present in such house at such time shall, unless he account for his presence to the satisfaction of the justices having cognizance of the case, be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for each offence.

17. In order to constitute a second or third offence previous offence need not have been committed within a limited period.—In the following cases, that is to say,

- (1.) Where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor or conditions of a licence granted to him under any of the said recited acts, or of an offence for which a penalty is imposed by any of the said recited acts;
- (2.) Where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor of a licence granted to him under the said act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth; if any previous conviction or convictions since the passing of this act for any of the said offences be proved against him, the offence of which he is last convicted shall be deemed to be a second or third offence, as the case may be: provided that the said previous conviction or convictions did take place within the five years next preceding.

18. As to management of houses licensed for sale of table beer.—All houses or shops licensed for the sale of table beer under the act twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of Victoria, chapter twenty-one, and all premises on which any person is authorised by virtue of an additional licence granted under the said recited act of the twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh years of the reign of Her present Majesty to sell beer by retail, and all persons holding such licences, shall be subject and liable to all and every the regulations, restrictions, inspections, and penalties as to times of opening and closing of houses, and conduct of persons conducting or carrying on the trade to which beerhouses, and persons licensed to keep the same, are subject and liable under the several statutes relating thereto.

19. Existing licences to be renewed, except in certain cases.—Where, on the first of May, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, a licence under any of the said recited acts is in force with respect to any house or shop for the sale by retail therein of beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on the premises, it shall not be lawful for the justices to refuse an application for a certificate for the sale of beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on the premises in respect of such house or shop, except upon one or more of the grounds upon which an application for a certificate under this act in respect of a licence for the sale of beer, cider, or wine, not to be consumed on the premises, may be refused, in accordance with this act: Provided that where a person licensed in respect of such house or shop to sell therein by retail beer, cider, or wine to be consumed on the premises is convicted, after the passing of this act, of more than one offence against the tenor of his licence, or of more than one offence for which any penalty is imposed by any of the said recited acts, the justices by whom such person is convicted may, if they think fit, order that the house or shop shall, for the purposes of this section, be thenceforth deemed to be a house or shop in respect of which no licence for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine was in force at the time of the passing of this act: Provided always, that every holder of such licence shall, when required by any two justices, be bound to produce his licence under a penalty not exceeding ten pounds, to be levied in default of payment, on the order of such justices, by distraint upon his goods and chattels; and provided also, that no conviction under the powers and provisions of this act shall be deemed to affect any licence in force as aforesaid, unless the justices by whom such conviction was adjudged shall have directed their clerk to record and the clerk shall have recorded on the licence the fact of that conviction.

20. Nothing to affect privileges and rights herein named.—Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed to affect—

(1.) The privileges heretofore enjoyed by any university in England, or the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the same, or their successors:

(2.) The privileges heretofore enjoyed by the masters, wardens, freemen, and commonalty of the vintners of the City of London, except as to those freemen of the said vintners who have obtained their freedom by redemption only:

(3.) The privileges heretofore enjoyed by the mayor or burgesses of the city of St. Albans in the county of Hertford, or their successors:

(4.) The right of any person who is duly authorised by justices of the peace to keep a common inn, alehouse, or victualling house to take out any excise licence:

(5.) The grant of any occasional licence, or the power of any person duly authorised by the excise to sell beer, spirits, or wine at any fair or public races.

21. As to repeal of acts set forth in second schedule.—The several parts of the acts set forth in the second schedule hereto shall be repealed to the extent therein specified so far as relates to any licence under any of the said recited acts granted after the passing of this act within any place to which this act applies: Provided that such repeal shall not affect—

(1.) Any liability incurred or thing duly done before the commencement of this act:

(2.) Any penalty, forfeiture, or other punishment incurred in respect of any offence committed before the commencement of this act:

(3.) Any legal proceeding or legal remedy for enforcing or recovering any such liability, thing, penalty, forfeiture, or punishment as aforesaid.

22. Act to be in force for two years.—This act shall be in force for two years from the date of the passing thereof, and until the end of the next session of Parliament.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 38.

An Act to facilitate the taking Special Bails in Civil Proceedings depending in the Superior Courts of Law at Westminster, and in Proceedings in Error and on Appeal.—[26th July, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to increase the number of persons authorised to take special bails in actions and civil proceedings depending or to be depending in any of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer at Westminster, and in proceedings in error or on appeal arising out of any such actions or proceedings:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Persons authorised to take affidavits in common law courts may also take bails.—All persons empowered to take affidavits under any commission now issued or hereafter to be issued under the authority of the act passed in the twenty-ninth year of the reign of King Charles the Second, intituled "An Act for taking Affidavits in the Country, to be made use of in the Courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer," whether they are or are not attorneys or solicitors, shall and may exercise all the powers which by the act passed in the fourth year of the reign of King William the Third and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act for taking special Bails in the Country upon Actions and Suits depending in the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer at Westminster," and by the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the first and second years of our said lady the Queen, intituled "An Act to extend the Jurisdiction of the Judges of the Superior Courts of Common Law to amend Chapter Fifty-six of the First Year of Her present Majesty's Reign, for regulating the Admission of Attorneys, and to provide for the taking of special Bail in the Absence of the Judges," are given to persons by the commissions issued under those acts or either of them; and such of the enactments of the said acts of the reigns of William and Mary and of Her present Majesty as are now unrepealed shall apply to commissions issued under the said act of the reign of Charles the Second, and the persons empowered by those commissions, whether they are or are not attorneys or solicitors, in like manner and to the like extent as if the commissions issued under the said act of Charles the Second were commissions issued under the said other acts respectively. And the persons to whom commissions are issued under the said act of the reign of Charles the Second, under the seal of the Court of Exchequer, may also take recognisances of every kind and all bail, as well in error as otherwise, on the revenue side of the Court of Exchequer, and the said act of the reign of William and Mary, so far as the same is not repealed, shall apply and extend to the last-mentioned recognisances and bail when so taken.

Cap. 34.

2. Interpretation of "bail."—The word "bail" in the said acts of the reigns of William and Mary, and Her present Majesty, as applied to this act, shall include bail in error, and bail on any appeal arising out of any action or civil proceedings in any of the said courts.

3. Fees.—The commissioners empowered by this act may demand and receive for any services the same fees as are payable to commissioners under the said act of William and Mary for similar services, or such fees as the Treasury, with the approbation of any three judges of the Superior Courts of law at Westminster, may hereafter authorise to be taken.

4. Rules and practice.—The rules and practice of the said courts now in force or hereafter to be made relating to bail shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to all proceedings under this act.

5. Attorneys not to exercise powers of this act where interested.—No attorney or solicitor shall exercise any of the powers given by this act in any proceeding in which he is the attorney or solicitor of any of the parties to that proceeding or in which he is interested.

6. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Bails Act, 1869."

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 39.

An Act to make Provision for the better Government and Administration of Hospitals and other endowed Institutions in Scotland.—[26th July, 1869.]

SUNDAY AND RAGGED SCHOOLS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 40.

Cap. 40.

An Act to exempt from rating Sunday and Ragged Schools.—[26th July, 1869.]

Whereas for many years and until lately buildings used as Sunday and Ragged Schools for gratuitous education enjoyed an exemption from poor and other rates, and it is expedient that they should be exempted from such liability: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. From 30th September, 1869, Sunday and Ragged Schools may be exempted from rates for relief of poor, &c.—From and after the thirtieth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, every authority having power to impose or levy any rate upon the occupier of any building or part of a building used exclusively as a Sunday School or Ragged School may exempt such building or part of a building from any rate for any purpose whatever which such authority has power to impose or levy: Provided, that nothing in this act contained shall prejudice or affect the right of exemption from rating of Sunday or Infant Schools, or for the charitable education of the poor in any churches, district churches, chapels, meeting houses, or other premises, or any vestry rooms belonging thereto, or any part thereof, by virtue of an act passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of King William the Fourth, chapter thirty, intituled "An Act to exempt from Poor and Church Rates all Churches, Chapels, and other Places of Religious Worship."

2. Interpretation of terms.—A "Sunday School" shall mean any school used for giving religious education gratuitously to children and young persons on Sunday, and on week days for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object, and without pecuniary profit being derived therefrom.

A "Ragged School" shall mean any school used for the gratuitous education of children and young persons of the poorest classes, and for the holding of classes and meetings in furtherance of the same object, and without any pecuniary benefit being derived therefrom except to the teacher of teachers employed.

3. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Ireland.

4. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Sunday and Ragged Schools (Exemption from Rating) Act, 1869."

ASSESSED RATES ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 41.

Cap. 41.

An Act for amending the Law with respect to the rating of Occupiers for short Terms, and the making and collecting of the Poor's Rate.—[26th July, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to the collection of poor rates assessed upon occupiers of hereditaments held for short terms, and to the making and collecting of the poor-rate:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sec. 1. Occupiers of tenements let for short terms may deduct the poor-rate paid by them from their rents.—The occupier of any rateable hereditament let to him for a term not exceeding three months shall be entitled to deduct the amount paid by him in respect of any poor-rate assessed upon such hereditament from the rent due or accruing due to the owner, and every such payment shall be a valid discharge of the rent to the extent of the rate so paid.

2. Amount of rate payable by occupier.—No such occupier shall be compelled to pay to the overseers at one time or within four weeks a greater amount of the rate than would be due for one quarter of the year.

3. Owners may agree to pay the rate, and be allowed a commission.—In case the rateable value of any hereditament does not exceed twenty pounds, if the hereditament is situate in the metropolis, or thirteen pounds if situate in any parish wholly or partly within the borough of Liverpool, or ten pounds if situate in any parish wholly or partly within the city of Manchester or the borough of Birmingham, or eight pounds if situate elsewhere, and the owner of such hereditament is willing to enter into an agreement in writing with the overseers to become liable to them for the poor-rates assessed in respect of such hereditament, for any term not being less than one year from the date of such agreement, and to pay the poor-rates, whether the hereditament is occupied or not, the overseers may, subject nevertheless to the control of the vestry, agree with the owner to receive the rates from him, and to allow to him a commission not exceeding twenty-five per cent. on the amount thereof.

4. Vestries may order the owner to be rated instead of the occupier.—The vestry of any parish may from time to time order that the owners of all rateable hereditaments to which section three of this act extends, situate within such parish, shall be rated to the poor-rate in respect of such rateable hereditaments, instead of the occupiers, on all rates made after the date of such order; and thereupon and so long as such order shall be in force the following enactments shall have effect:

1. The overseers shall rate the owners instead of the occupiers, and shall allow to them an abatement or deduction of fifteen per centum from the amount of the rate:

2. If the owner of one or more such rateable hereditaments shall give notice to the overseers in writing that he is willing to be rated for any term not being less than one year in respect of all such rateable hereditaments of which he is the owner, whether the same be occupied or not, the overseers shall rate such owner accordingly, and allow to him a further abatement or deduction not exceeding fifteen per centum from the amount of the rate during the time he is so rated:

3. The vestry may by resolution rescind any such order after a day to be fixed by them, such day being not less than six months after the passing of such resolution, but the order shall continue in force with respect to all the rates made before the date on which the resolution takes effect:

Provided that this clause shall not be applicable to any rateable hereditament in which a dwelling house shall not be included.

5. Owners omitting to pay rates before the fifth day of June to forfeit commission.—When an owner who has become liable to pay the poor-rate omits or neglects to pay, before the fifth day of June in any year, any rate or any instalment thereof which has become due previously to the preceding fifth day of January, and has been duly demanded by a demand-note delivered to him or left at his usual or last known place of abode, he shall not be entitled to deduct or receive any commission, abatement, or allowance to which he would, except for such omission or neglect, be entitled under this act, but shall be liable to pay, and shall pay, such rate or instalment in full.

6. Repeal of 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, &c., so far as the same applied to the poor-rate.—The statute thirteenth and fourteenth Victoria, chapter ninety-nine, with respect to the rating of small tenements, and so much of any local statute as relates to the rating of owners instead of occupiers, are hereby repealed, so far as the same apply to any poor-rate made after this act comes into operation.

7. Constructive payment of the rate.—Every payment of a rate by the occupier, notwithstanding the amount thereof may be deducted from his rent as herein provided, and every payment of a rate by the owner, whether he is himself rated instead of the occupier, or has agreed with the occupier or with the overseers to pay such rate, and notwithstanding any allowance or deduction which the overseers are empowered to make from the rate, shall be deemed a payment of the full rate by the occupier for the purpose of any qualification or franchise which as regards rating depends upon the payment of the poor-rate.

8. Where owners omit to pay rates, the occupiers paying the same may deduct the amount from the rent.—Where an owner who has undertaken, whether by agreement with the occupier or with the overseers, to pay the poor-rates, or has otherwise become liable to pay the same, omits or neglects to pay any such rate, the occupier may pay the same and deduct the amount from the rent due or accruing due to the owner, and the receipt for such rate shall be a valid discharge of the rent to the extent of the rate so paid.

Cap. 41.

9. Owners to give lists of occupiers and liable to penalty for wilful omission.—Every owner who agrees with the overseers to pay the poor-rate, or who is rated or liable to be rated for any hereditament instead of the occupier, shall deliver to the overseers, from time to time, when required by them, in writing, a list containing the names of the actual occupiers of the hereditaments comprised in such agreement, or for which he is so rated or liable to be rated; and if any such owner wilfully omits to deliver such list when required to do so, or wilfully omits therefrom or misstates therein the name of any occupier, he shall for every such omission or misstatement be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding two pounds.

10. Notice to occupiers of rates in arrear.—Section twenty-eight of "The Representation of the People Act, 1867," with respect to notice to be given of rates in arrear, shall apply to occupiers of premises capable of conferring the Parliamentary franchise, although the owners of such premises have become liable for the rates assessed thereon under the provisions of this act.

11. Liability of owner under agreement.—Where the owner has become liable to the payment of the poor-rates, the rates due from him, together with the costs and charges of levying and recovering the same, may be levied on the goods of the owner, and be recovered from him in the same way as poor-rates may be recovered from the occupier.

12. Recovery of rates unpaid by the owner.—Notwithstanding the owner of any such rateable hereditament as aforesaid has become liable for payment of the poor-rates assessed thereon, the goods and chattels of the occupier shall be liable to be distrained and sold for payment of such rates as may accrue during his occupation of the premises, at any time whilst such rates remain unpaid by the owner, subject to the following provisions:

1. That no such distress shall be levied unless the rate has been demanded in writing by the overseers from the occupier, and the occupier has failed to pay the same within fourteen days after the service of such demand:

2. That no greater sum shall be raised by such distress than shall at the time of making the same be actually due from the occupier for rent of the premises on which the distress is made:

3. That any such occupier shall be entitled to deduct the amount of rates for which such distress is made, and the expense of distraint, from the rent due or accruing due to the owner, and every such payment shall be a valid discharge of the rent to the extent of the rate and expenses paid.

13. Owner may appeal against valuation list and rate.—Every owner of any hereditament for the rates of which he has become liable shall have the same right of appeal (subject to the same conditions and consequences) against the valuation lists and the poor-rates as if he were the occupier thereof.

14. The overseer to state the period for which poor-rate is made.—Proviso.—The overseers of every parish when they make a poor-rate shall set forth in the title of the rate the period for which the same is estimated, and if the same is payable by instalments the amount of each instalment and the date at which each instalment is payable; provided that if the necessities of the parish shall require it another rate may be made before such period shall have elapsed.

15. Overseers may make poor-rate payable by instalments.—The overseers who make the poor-rate for a period exceeding three months may declare that the same shall be paid by instalments at such times as they shall specify, and thereupon each instalment only shall be enforceable as and when it falls due, and the payment of any such instalment shall, as respects any qualification or franchise depending upon the payment of the poor-rate, be deemed a payment of such rate in respect of the period to which such instalment applies.

16. Provision for successive occupiers, and for occupiers coming into unoccupied hereditaments.—If the occupier assessed in the rate when made shall cease to occupy before the rate shall have been wholly discharged, or if the hereditament being unoccupied at the time of the making of the rate become occupied during the period for which the rate is made, the overseers shall enter in the rate-book the name of the person who succeeds or comes into the occupation, as the case may be, and the date when such occupation commences, so far as the same shall be known to them, and such occupier shall thenceforth be deemed to have been actually rated from the date so entered by the overseer, and shall be liable to pay so much of the rate as shall be proportionate to the time between the commencement of his occupation and the expiration of the period for which the rate was made, in like manner, and with the like remedy of appeal, as if he had been rated when the rate was made; and an outgoing occupier shall remain liable in like manner for so much and no more of the rate as is proportionate to the time of his occupation within the period for which the rate was made; and the twelfth section of the statute 17 Geo. 2, c. 38, shall be repealed.

17. When the poor-rate shall be deemed to be made.—A poor-rate shall be deemed to be made on the day when it is allowed by the justices, and if the justices sever in their allowance then on the day of the last allowance.

18. Evidence of making and publication of rates.—The production of the book purporting to contain a poor-rate, with the allowance of the rate by the justices, shall, if the rate is made in the form prescribed by law, be prima facie evidence of the due making and publication of such rate.

19. Overseers to insert names of all occupiers in the rate.—Penalty for omission.—Saving of franchises.—The overseers in making out the poor-rate shall, in every case, whether the rate is collected from the owner or occupier, or the owner is liable to the payment of the rate instead of the occupier, enter in the occupier's column of the rate-book the name of the occupier of every rateable hereditament, and such occupier shall be deemed to be duly rated for any qualification or franchise as aforesaid; and if any overseer negligently or wilfully and without reasonable cause omits the name of the occupier of any rateable hereditament from the rate, or negligently or wilfully misstates any name therein, such overseer shall for every such omission or misstatement be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding two pounds; provided that any occupier whose name has been omitted shall, notwithstanding such omission and that no claim to be rated has been made by him, be entitled to every qualification and franchise depending upon rating, in the same manner as if his name had not been so omitted.

20. Interpretation of terms.—The word "overseer" shall include every authority that makes an assessment for the poor-rate; the words "poor-rate" shall mean the assessment for the relief of the poor, and for the other purposes chargeable thereon according to law, and in the metropolis shall extend to every rate made by the overseers, and chargeable upon the same property as the poor-rate; the word "owner" shall mean any person receiving or claiming the rent of the hereditament for his own use, or receiving the same for the use of any corporation aggregate, or of any public company, or of any landlord or lessee who shall be a minor, a married woman, or insane, or for the use of any person for whom he is acting as agent; the word "parish" shall signify every place for which a separate overseer can be appointed; the word "vestry" shall include not only the vestry of a parish existing under the authority of some general or special act of Parliament, or by special custom or otherwise, but also the meeting of the inhabitants of any township, vill, or place having a separate overseer, and for which a separate poor-rate is made, held after notice given in like manner as is required by law in regard to the meetings of vestries; and the word "metropolis" shall include only the metropolis as defined by "The Metropolis Management Act, 1855."

21. Application of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland or to Ireland.

22. Short title.—Commencement of act.—This act may be cited as "The Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869," and shall come into operation on the twenty-ninth of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine: Provided that the vestry of any parish may before that day order that the owners shall be rated instead of the occupiers under this act, but no such order shall take effect until after the said twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

POOR LAW UNION LOANS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 45.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Repayment of Loans to Poor Law Unions.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law with respect to the repayment of loans to Poor Law Unions:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Union Loans Act, 1869."

2. Application of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Interpretation of terms.—Words in this act shall have the same meaning as in "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1834."

4. Moneys borrowed by guardians to be a charge on common fund.—In the following cases, namely,—

(1.) Where any moneys borrowed before the passing of this act, and since the twenty-fifth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, by the guardians of any union, with the consent of the Poor Law Board, are owing by such guardians on the twenty-ninth day of September one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine;

(2.) Where any moneys are borrowed by the guardians of any union, with the consent of the Poor Law Board, after the passing of this act;

Such moneys, with the interest thereon, shall from and after the

Cap 41.

Cap. 45.

said twenty-ninth day of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, be a charge upon and be paid out of the common fund of such union: Provided always, that no moneys borrowed before the passing of this act shall be so charged and paid without the unanimous consent of a meeting of guardians, of which meeting, and of the business to be transacted, at least seven days notice shall be given to each guardian, nor without the consent of the Poor Law Board.

5. Manner in which moneys borrowed by guardians may be repaid.—Any sum or sums of money borrowed by the guardians of any union or parish after the passing of this act may, at the option of such guardians, and with the consent of the Poor Law Board, be repaid—

(1.) By thirty equal annual payments of the principal sum borrowed, with the interest on the balance remaining unpaid each year:

(2.) By such equal annual payments as, reckoning principal and interest together, will repay the sum borrowed within thirty years.

6. Repeal of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 105, s. 7, and provision for future securities.—Sect. 7 of "The Poor Law Amendment Act, 1851," is repealed in respect of any loan to be effected after this act comes into operation, and thenceforth every security for money borrowed under the authority of any order of the Poor Law Board may be made according to the following form, or as near thereto as the circumstances of the case will admit:

Form of Security.

This deed made the _____ day of _____, in the year one thousand eight hundred and _____, witnesseth that in consideration of the sum of _____ lent to the guardians of the poor of the _____ Union, in the county of _____, or to the guardians of the poor of the parish of _____, in the county of _____, or to the board of management of the _____ District (School or Asylum) or to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of _____, or to the overseers of the poor of the township of _____, in the county of _____, under the provisions of the act [here state the act authorising the loan], and in pursuance of and upon the authority of an order of the Poor Law Board, bearing date the _____ day of _____ by [here set out the name and description of the public board, commissioners, or company, or the person, lending the money], the receipt of which sum is testified by the memorandum at the foot thereof, signed by our treasurer [or, in the case of the overseers, by us], we the said guardians do hereby charge the common fund of the said union or the poor-rates of the said parish, or we, the said board of management, do charge the common fund of the district, or the poor-rates to be raised in the several unions and parishes combined in the said district, namely [here set out the names of the unions and parishes combined in the district], or we the said churchwardens and overseers or overseers do hereby charge the future poor-rates of the said parish or township with the repayment of the said sum of _____ by [here insert the number of yearly instalments by which the loan is to be repaid, not exceeding the number limited by the statute or statutes under which it is advanced, but including those to which the time of repayment may have been extended under any statute in that behalf] instalments on the day in the years following, that is to say, the sum of _____ on the _____ day of _____ in the year one thousand eight hundred and _____ the sum of _____ on the _____ day of _____ in the year one thousand eight hundred and _____ the sum of _____ on the _____ day of _____ in the year one thousand eight hundred and _____, together with interest at the rate of _____ pounds per centum per annum yearly on the days aforesaid or half-yearly on the _____ day of _____ and on the _____ day of _____ in every year upon the principal for the time being unpaid according to the terms of this security or by instalments of the sum of _____ in respect of the principal and interest of the sum so borrowed to be paid on the _____ day of _____ in every succeeding year during a period not exceeding _____ years; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said _____ from receiving the repayment of the whole or part of the aforesaid sum at any time before the day of payment of the last instalment if willing to do so.

NOTE.—The twenty-second and twenty-third Victoria, chapter forty-nine, section three, enacts that in the case of any debt charged by guardians upon the poor-rates made repayable by instalments, each instalment shall be payable within one year next after the day when the same shall fall due, unless the Poor Law Board shall allow an extension of the time for the payment not exceeding six months, and the interest shall be payable within the like times only as the principal.

DEBTS OF DECEASED PERSONS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 46.

An Act to abolish the Distinction as to Priority of Payment which now exists between the specialty and simple Contract Debts of deceased Persons.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to abolish the distinction as to priority of payment between specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. All specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons stand in equal degree after 1st January, 1870.—In the administration of the estate of every person who shall die on or after the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, no debt or liability of such person shall be entitled to any priority or preference by reason merely that the same is secured by or arises under a bond, deed, or other instrument under seal, or is otherwise made or constituted a specialty debt; but all the creditors of such person, as well specialty as simple contract, shall be treated as standing in equal degree, and be paid accordingly out of the assets of such deceased person, whether such assets are equal or equitable, any statute or other law to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that this act shall not prejudice or affect any lien, charge, or other security which any creditor may hold or be entitled to for the payment of his debt.

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland.

HIGH CONSTABLE'S OFFICE ABOLITION, &c., ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 47.

An Act to provide for the Discharge of the Duties heretofore performed by High Constables and for the Abolition of such Office, with certain Exceptions.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to abolish the office of high constable in England and Wales, except in certain cases, and to make provision for the discharge of the duties heretofore performed by such constables:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Interpretation of terms.—For the purposes of this act the word "high constable" shall include any constable of any hundred or other like district, and any officer discharging the duties usually performed by high constables by whatever name such officer shall be called; and the word "county" shall include any riding, division, liberty, and place having separate quarter sessions of the peace.

2. When vacancies not to be filled up.—It shall be the duty of the justices of the peace for every county in quarter sessions assembled in the month of January next after the passing of this act to consider and determine whether it is necessary that the office of high constable of each hundred or other like district within their jurisdiction should be continued, and whenever such justices so assembled as aforesaid shall have determined in the case of any such hundred or other like district that it is not necessary that the office of high constable should be continued, they shall send notice of such determination to the person or persons in whom the appointment of such high constable is vested, and on the occurrence thereafter of any vacancy in such office such vacancy shall not be filled up, but this provision shall not apply to the case of any high constable who is by law or custom returning officer at any Parliamentary or municipal election, or is charged with the supervision of the register of electors, or in whom is vested by virtue of his office any real property.

3. How notices are to be sent.—It shall be the duty of the clerk to the justices of the peace in each petty sessional division, other than those which are either wholly or partly within the metropolitan police district or the City of London, to send by post to the proper parties in such division all notices of the holding of special or other sessions, of days of appeal, and of any other matter or thing (except such as relate to claims against the hundred or other like district, or to Parliamentary or municipal elections, or the registration of electors) of which notices are now by law or custom served upon or sent to any parochial officer or other person by high constables, and no precept or notice to perform any such duty in any such division shall hereafter be issued to any high constable, after the passing of this act.

4. Provisions of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33 to come into general operation.—All the provisions of the act passed in the session of Parliament holden in the seventh and eighth years of the reign of Her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intitled "An Act for facilitating the Collection of County Rates and for relieving High Constables from attendance at Quarter Sessions in certain Cases and from certain other Duties," which under such act are to come into force upon the occurrence of any vacancy in the office of high constable of any hundred, shall come into force immediately after the passing of this act in every case as if a vacancy in such office had occurred.

5. Chief constable to act in case of claims against hundred.—In every action to be brought or summary claim to be preferred against any hundred or other like district, of which there is no high constable, the process for appearance in the action and the notice required in the case of the claim shall be served upon the chief constable or other acting chief officer of police for the time being of the county in which such hundred or district is situate, and all matters which by any act the high constable of a hundred is authorised or required to do in either of such cases shall be done by the officer so served, who shall have the same powers, rights, and remedies, and be subject to the same liabilities as any high constable would but for the passing of this act have had and incurred under any act of Parliament, and in case of the termination of his office by death or otherwise his successor shall act in his stead.

Cap. 46.

Cap. 47.

6. Pensions may be given in certain cases.—If it shall appear to the justices assembled at any court of quarter sessions that any high constable within the jurisdiction of such court, holding office for life or during good behaviour, has suffered or is likely to suffer by reason of the passing of this act any loss of emolument heretofore chargeable upon the county stock or rate, it shall be lawful for such justices upon the application of any such constable, notice having been given at a previous meeting of the court, to order that such sum shall be annually or quarterly paid to such constable during his life and charged upon the county stock or rate as shall seem to them reasonable, regard being had to the cessation of any duties in respect of which such emoluments had theretofore been received by him and to any other circumstances in the case, and in the case of any such constable holding office as aforesaid, and remunerated by salary conditional upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the annual sum to be awarded him by such order shall not be less than two-thirds of such salary.

7. Provision in case of hundreds situate partly in boroughs.—When part of any hundred or other like district is within the limits of any borough or place having separate police jurisdiction, such hundred or district shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be in the county in which the other part of such hundred or district is situate.

8. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The High Constables Act, 1869."

COMPANIES CLAUSES ACT (1863) AMENDMENT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 48.

Cap. 48. An Act to amend "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863."—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863," has been amended in certain respects as regards railway companies, and it is expedient that such amendments should extend to other companies:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Amendment of Part III. of 26 & 27 Vict. c. 118, as to rate of interest on debenture stock.—Part III. of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863," shall be read and have effect as if the following words, that is to say, "not exceeding the rate prescribed in the special act, and if no rate is prescribed, then not exceeding the rate of four pounds per centum per annum," had not been inserted in section 22 of that act, and any special act of a company passed before the passing of this act, prescribing any rate, shall be read and have effect as if no rate had been prescribed therein.

2. Restriction on rate of interest on debenture stock already authorised.—Provided that any debenture stock, the creation whereof has been authorised by a company, but which has not been issued before the passing of this act, shall not be issued on any terms other than those whereon it might have been issued if this act had not been passed, unless and until the issue thereof, on terms other than as aforesaid, is after the passing of this act authorised by the company in manner provided in section 22 of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863."

3. Power to issue debenture stock, subject to Part III. of 26 & 27 Vict. c. 118.—Any company having power to raise money on mortgage or bond by virtue of any act of Parliament, but not having power to create and issue debenture stock, may create and issue debenture stock subject to the provisions of Part III. of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863" relating to debenture stock, and Part III. of the said act, as amended by this act, shall be deemed to be incorporated with the special act of every such company.

4. Advances to meet debentures falling due.—Money borrowed by a company for the purpose of paying off and duly applied in paying off bonds or mortgages of the company given or made under the statutory powers of the company shall, so far as the same is so applied, be deemed money borrowed within and not in excess of such statutory powers.

5. Power to issue shares or stock at discount.—Section 21 of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863," shall, with respect to any company to which it is applicable under the provisions of this or any other act, be read and have effect as if the following words, that is to say, "but so that no less than the full nominal amount of any share or portion of stock be payable or paid in respect thereof," had not been inserted in that section.

6. Power to issue residue of original or other capital at discount.

—Any shares forming part of the capital (whether original or additional) authorised to be raised by any special act of a company passed before the present session which have not been disposed of may be disposed of in manner provided by Part II. of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863," as amended by this act, and that part, as so amended, shall be deemed incorporated with such special act accordingly.

7. Restriction on issuing at discount shares or stock already authorised.—Provided, that any shares, the creation whereof has been authorised by a company, but which have not been issued before the passing of this act, shall not be issued on any terms other than those whereon the same might have been issued if this act had not been passed unless and until the issue thereof on terms other than as aforesaid is after the passing of this act authorised by the company in manner provided by Part II. of "The Companies Clauses Act, 1863."

8. Act not to affect provisions as to capital upon which the dividend is limited.—Provided always, that this act shall not be construed to alter or extend the provisions of any act relating to share capital in respect of which the amount of profits to be divided is limited to a fixed rate per centum upon the paid-up capital of the company.

9. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Companies Clauses Act, 1869."

FINES AND FEES COLLECTION ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 49.

An Act to enable local Authorities to collect Fines and Fees by Means of Stamps.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to authorise the collection of certain fees and fines hereafter mentioned by means of stamps:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Local Stamp Act, 1869."

2. Application of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Interpretation of "local authority."—For the purposes of this act "local authority" shall mean in any county, parts, liberty, or division of a county having a separate commission of the peace, the justices in general or quarter sessions assembled; in any borough subject to the jurisdiction of a council or other governing body, the council or other governing body for the borough.

4. Power to collect fees and penalties by stamps.—Whenever all the clerks of special and petty sessions and all the clerks of the justices of the peace within the jurisdiction of any local authority are paid in the whole or partly by salaries, by virtue of any order made under the act of the session of the fourteenth and fifteenth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter fifty-five, it shall be lawful for any such local authority, if they think fit, notice having been given at a previous meeting of the local authority of such purpose, to order that, from and after a day to be named in such order, all or any of the fees, fines, and penalties payable to the treasurer of the county, parts, liberty, division, or borough respectively within the jurisdiction of such local authority, or to any person on account of such treasurer, shall be received by such treasurer or such person as aforesaid by means of stamps denoting the sums payable, and not in money, and to cause such dies to be made as may be required for the purpose of carrying into effect this act; subject nevertheless to such rules as may from time to time be made and published by such local authority, with the approval of one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and with the assent, so far as relates to the pattern, colour, and form of stamps and dies, and the making and impressing of the same, of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue; and it shall be lawful for any such local authority from time to time, with the like notice, to revoke, vary, or renew any such order, the like approval and assent being first obtained for any such variation or renewal.

5. Unstamped document not to be valid.—Any document to or on which a stamp or stamps ought to be affixed or impressed under this act, or under any rule for the time being in force under this act within the jurisdiction of any local authority, shall not be of any validity unless the proper stamp or stamps has or have been affixed or impressed, or unless a certificate has been signed thereon by a justice of the peace acting in the matter to the effect that he has excused or postponed the affixing or impressing of the proper stamp or stamps, in which case the document shall be of the same validity as if the proper stamp or stamps had been duly affixed or impressed; Provided that if any such document is, through mistake or inadvertence, received, lodged, recorded, or used without being properly stamped, it shall be competent for the court or judge before whom the cause or proceeding depends to which such document relates to order that the same be stamped as in such order may be directed; and on every such document being stamped accordingly, the same, and every proceeding relative thereto, shall be as valid as if such document had been properly stamped in the first instance.

6. Authority to sell stamps—Penalty.—The local authority may, by order under the hands of any two of their number, authorise any persons to sell or distribute stamps for the purpose of this act, upon such terms and subject to such conditions as such local authority may direct, and may from time to time revoke any authority so granted. If any person not authorised as aforesaid sells or distributes any such stamps as are authorised to be used for the purpose of this act, he shall upon summary conviction be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

Cap. 48.

7. Expenses of act.—All expenses which may be incurred by any local authority in or about the preparing or making of dies or stamps, or in or about the carrying into execution of any of the powers given them by this act, shall be defrayed out of and be a charge upon the county or borough rate respectively of such local authority.

8. Penalties for offences herein named.—If any person is guilty of any of the following offences,—

- (1.) Forges or counterfeits, or causes or procures to be forged or counterfeited, any stamp or die, or any part of any stamp or die, provided, made, or used in pursuance of this act; or,
- (2.) Forges or counterfeits, or causes or procures to be forged or counterfeited, the impression, or any part of the impression, of any such stamp or die as aforesaid upon any document; or,
- (3.) With intent to defraud the local authority, stamps, or marks, or causes or procures to be stamped or marked, any document with any such forged or counterfeited stamp or die;
- (4.) Sells or exposes for sale any document having thereupon the impression of any such forged or counterfeited stamp or die, or part of any such stamp or die, or any such forged or counterfeited impression or part of an impression, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited; or,
- (5.) Fraudulently cuts or gets off, or causes or procures to be cut or got off, the impression of any such stamp or die from any document, with intent to use the same for any other document; or,
- (6.) Knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof lies on the person accused) has in his possession any false, forged, or counterfeited die, plate, or other instrument, or part of any such die, plate, or instrument, resembling or intended to resemble, either wholly or in part, any stamp or die which at any time whatever has been or may be provided, made, or used by or under the direction of the local authority for the purposes of this act; or,
- (7.) Knowingly and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof lies on the person accused) has in his possession any vellum, parchment, or paper having thereon the impression of any such false, forged, or counterfeit stamp or die, or having thereon any false, forged, or counterfeit mark, or impression resembling or representing, either wholly or in part, or intended or liable to pass or be mistaken for any such stamp or die;
- (8.) With intent to defraud the local authority, forges or alters, or offers, utters, disposes of, or puts off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any certificate of a justice of the peace under this act, or any signature to any certificate purporting to be signed by a justice of the peace under this act;

Every person so offending, and every person knowingly and wilfully aiding and abetting any person in committing any such offence, and being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be judged guilty of felony, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to penal servitude for any term not less than five years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years.

COUNTY COURTS (ADMIRALTY JURISDICTION) ACT (1868) AMENDMENT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 51.

Cap. 51.

An Act to amend "The County Courts (Admiralty Jurisdiction) Act, 1868," and to give jurisdiction in certain Maritime Causes.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Amendment Act, 1869," and shall be read and interpreted as one act with the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868."

2. Extension of jurisdiction over ships and goods.—If parties agree, causes in respect of claims of higher amount may be determined by County Court.—Any County Court appointed or to be appointed to have Admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction, and all powers and authorities relating thereto, to try and determine the following causes:

- (1.) As to any claim arising out of any agreement made in relation to the use or hire of any ship, or in relation to the carriage of goods in any ship, and also as to any claim in tort in respect of goods carried in any ship, provided the amount claimed does not exceed three hundred pounds:

(2.) As to any cause in respect of any such claim or claims as aforesaid, but in which the amount claimed is beyond the amount limited as above mentioned, when the parties agree, by a memorandum signed by them or by their attorneys or agents, that any County Court having Admiralty jurisdiction, and specified in the memorandum, shall have jurisdiction.

3. Proceedings in rem or in personam.—The jurisdiction conferred by this act and by "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868," may be exercised either by proceedings in rem or by proceedings in personam.

4. Amendment of sect. 3 of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71.—The third section of "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868," shall extend and apply to all claims for damage to ships, whether by collision or otherwise, when the amount claimed does not exceed three hundred pounds.

5. As to appointment of mercantile assessors.—In any Admiralty or maritime cause the judge may, if he think fit, or, on the request of either party, be assisted by two mercantile assessors; and all the provisions of "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868," with reference to nautical assessors, shall apply to the appointment, approval, summoning, and remuneration of such mercantile assessors.

6. Power of assessor of Court of Passage to make general rules and orders.—The assessor of the Court of Passage of the borough of Liverpool shall have power from time to time to make general rules and orders for regulating the practice and procedure of the Admiralty and maritime jurisdiction in the said court, and for other purposes mentioned in section thirty-five of "The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868;" and any general rules and orders already made or hereafter to be made by the said assessor for any of the purposes aforesaid shall be of full force and effect as if the same had been made under this or the aforesaid act.

2. Commencement of act.—This act shall come into operation on the first day of September, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 55.

An Act to shorten the Term of Residence required as a Qualification for the Municipal Franchise, and to make Provision for other Purposes.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to shorten the term of occupation and residence required as a qualification for the municipal franchise, and to make provision for other purposes: Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows; that is to say,

Sect. 1. Sect. 9 of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, repealed.—One year's occupation to entitle persons to municipal franchise.—The ninth section of the act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, shall be repealed, and instead thereof be it enacted, that every person of full age who on the last day of July in any year shall have occupied any house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building within any borough during the whole of the preceding twelve calendar months, and also during the time of such occupation, shall have resided within the said borough, or within seven miles of the said borough, shall, if duly enrolled in that year according to the provisions contained in the said act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, and the acts amending the same, be a burgess of such borough and member of the body corporate of the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of such borough: Provided that no such person shall be so enrolled in any year unless he shall have been rated in respect of such premises so occupied by him within the borough to all rates made for the relief of the poor of the parish wherein such premises are situated during the time of his occupation as aforesaid, and unless he shall have paid on or before the twentieth day of July in such year all such rates, including therein all borough rates, if any, directed to be paid under the provisions of the said acts, as shall have become payable by him in respect of the said premises up to the preceding fifth day of January: Provided also, that the premises in respect of the occupation of which any person shall have been so rated need not be the same premises or in the same parish, but may be different premises in the same parish or in different parishes: Provided also, that no person being an alien shall be so enrolled in any year, and that no person shall be so enrolled in any year who, within twelve calendar months next before the said last day of July, shall have received parochial relief or other alms: Provided also, that the respective distances mentioned in this act shall be measured in the manner directed by section seventy-six of the act of the session of the sixth and seventh years of Queen Victoria, chapter eighteen.

Cap. 50.

Cap. 55.

2. Saving rights under existing burgess roll.—Nothing in this act contained shall affect any existing burgess roll, but every such roll shall continue in force until the first day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine.

3. Councillor or alderman may reside within fifteen miles of borough.—Any such occupier as aforesaid, who shall be rated in respect of premises as in this act mentioned, shall be entitled to be elected a councillor or an alderman of any borough, if resident within fifteen miles of said borough, although by reason of his residence beyond seven miles of the borough he is not entitled to be on the burgess roll of such borough, provided that he is otherwise qualified to be on the burgess roll, and to be elected a councillor or an alderman for such borough, and the following enactments shall take effect with respect to such occupiers:

1. The overseers shall make out and publish a separate list containing the name of every such occupier at the same time and in the same manner as the burgess list, and all the provisions of the said act of the fifth and sixth William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, and the acts amending the same with respect to objections and claims shall, as nearly as circumstances admit, apply to such separate list.

2. The separate list so made out shall be revised in the like manner as the burgess list, and when so revised shall be delivered to the town clerk and copied as a separate list at the end of the burgess roll.

4. Qualification for aldermen and councillors.—When any borough, consisting of less than four wards, shall at any time hereafter be divided into a greater number of wards, the qualification for an alderman or councillor of such borough shall not be increased or altered in consequence of such division, but shall continue the same as if such borough consisted of less than four wards.

5. Proprietors of shares in companies not to be deemed contractors, &c., and not to be disqualified from election to municipal offices by reason of such holding.—From and after the passing of this act no person shall be deemed to have had or to have an interest in a contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of the council of any borough by reason only of his having had or having a share or interest in any railway company or in any company incorporated by act of Parliament or by Royal charter, or under "The Companies Act, 1862," and no councillor, alderman, or mayor in any municipal corporation shall be deemed to have been or to be disqualified to be elected or to be such councillor, alderman, or mayor by reason only of his having had or having any share or interest in any railway company or in any company incorporated by act of Parliament or royal charter, or under "The Companies Act, 1862," but all elections of councillors, aldermen, or mayors as aforesaid shall be deemed and taken to have been and to be valid, notwithstanding any such share or interest as aforesaid.

6. Who may nominate for office of auditor and assessor.—At any election of auditors, revising assessors, or ward assessors, any person entitled to vote may nominate for the office of auditor or assessor, in like manner as such person can nominate for the office of councillor under and by virtue of the provisions in that behalf contained in the twenty-second Victoria, chapter thirty-five, and the proceedings in relation to such nomination and election shall be in all respects the same as are prescribed in the said act in relation to the election of councillors.

7. Time for receipt of nominations.—Every nomination for the office of councillor, assessor, or auditor must be sent to the town clerk so that the same shall be received in his office before five o'clock in the afternoon of the last day on which any such nomination may by law be made.

8. Elections to supply extraordinary vacancies.—If any extraordinary vacancy shall happen in the office of assessor, and at the same time a vacancy shall exist or arise in the office of councillor which cannot be legally filled up before the vacant office of assessor has been or can be by law filled up, the election to supply such vacant office of councillor shall be held before the alderman of the ward, or the mayor where the borough is not divided into wards, the continuing assessor, and such burgess (not being a burgess representing or enrolled on the burgess list for that ward, if the borough is divided into wards), as the mayor shall by writing under his hand appoint.

9. Words importing the masculine gender to include females.—In this act and the said recited act of the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, and the acts amending the same, wherever words occur which import the masculine gender the same shall be held to include females for all purposes connected with and having reference to the right to vote in the election of councillors, auditors, and assessors.

10. Act to be construed with 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, &c.—This act shall be construed as one with the said act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of King William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, and the acts amending the same, except so far as the same are altered or repealed by this act, and the words used in this act shall have the same meaning as in the said acts.

11. Extent of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

Cap. 55.

ENDOWED SCHOOLS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 56.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Endowed Schools and other Educational Endowments in England, and otherwise to provide for the Advancement of Education.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas the commissioners appointed by Her Majesty under letters patent dated the 28th day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, to inquire into the education given in schools not comprised within the scope of certain letters patent of Her Majesty, bearing date respectively the thirtieth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, and the eighteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, have made their report, and thereby recommended various changes in the government, management, and studies of endowed schools, and in the application of educational endowments, with the object of promoting their greater efficiency, and of carrying into effect the main designs of the founders thereof, by putting a liberal education within the reach of children of all classes; and have further recommended other measures for the object of improving education:

And whereas such objects cannot be attained without the authority of Parliament:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

SECT. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Endowed Schools Act, 1869."

2. Application of act.—This act shall not apply to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Commencement of act.—This act shall come into operation on the passing thereof, which date is in this act referred to as the commencement of this act.

4. Definition of "endowment."—In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "endowment" means every description of property, real, personal, and mixed, which is dedicated to such charitable uses as are referred to in this act, in whomsoever such property may be vested, and in whose name it may be standing, and whether such property is in possession or in reversion, or a thing in action.

5. Definition of "educational endowment."—In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "educational endowment" means an endowment or any part of an endowment which, or the income whereof, has been made applicable or is applied for the purposes of education at school of boys and girls or either of them, or of exhibitions tenable at a school or an university or elsewhere, whether the same has been made so applicable by the original instrument of foundation or by any subsequent act of Parliament, letters patent, decree, scheme, order, instrument, or other authority, and whether it has been made applicable or is applied in the shape—of payment to the governing body of any school or any member thereof, or to any teacher or officer of any school, or to any person bound to teach, or to scholars in any school, or their parents, or—of buildings, houses, or school apparatus for any school, or otherwise howsoever.

6. Definition of "endowed school."—In this act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term "endowed school" means a school which is (or if it were not in abeyance would be) wholly or partly maintained by means of any endowment: Provided that a school belonging to any person or body corporate shall not by reason only that exhibitions are attached to such school be deemed to be an endowed school.

7. Interpretation of terms.—In this act, unless the context otherwise requires—

The term "exhibition" means any exhibition, scholarship, or other like emolument; and the term "exhibitioners" and other terms referring to exhibitions are to be construed accordingly:

The term "governing body" means any body corporate, persons or person who have the right of holding, or any power of government of or management over any endowment or, other than as master, over any endowed school, or have any power, other than as master, of appointing officers, teachers, exhibitioners, or others, either in any endowed school, or with emoluments out of any endowment:

The term "Committee of Council on Education" means the Lords of the Committee of Her Majesty's Privy Council on Education.

8. Nothing in this act, except as expressly provided, to apply to certain schools herein named.—Nothing in this act, save as in this act expressly provided, shall apply—

(1.) To any school mentioned in section three of "The Public Schools Act, 1868," or to the endowment thereof:

(2.) To any school which, on the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, was maintained wholly or partly out of annual voluntary subscriptions, and had no endowment except school buildings or teachers' residences, or playground or gardens attached to such buildings or residences:

(3.) To any school which, at the commencement of this act, is in receipt of an annual grant out of any sum of money appropriated by Parliament to the civil service, intituled "For Public Education in Great Britain," or to the endowment thereof; unless such school is a grammar school, as defined by the act of the session of the third and fourth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter seventy-seven, or a school a department of which only is in receipt of such grant:

Cap. 56.

Cap. 56.

- (4.) To any school (unless it is otherwise subject to this act) which is maintained out of any endowment the income of which may, in the discretion of the governing body thereof, be wholly applied to other than educational purposes, or to such endowment:
- (5.) To any school (unless it is otherwise subject to this act) which receives assistance out of any endowment the income of which may, in the discretion of the governing body of such endowment, be applied to some other school:
- (6.) To any endowment applicable and applied solely for promoting the education of the ministers of any church or religious denomination, or for teaching any particular profession, or to any school (unless it is otherwise subject to this act) which receives assistance out of such endowment:
- (7.) To any school which, during the six months before the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, was used solely for the education of choristers, or to the endowment of any such school if applicable solely for such education.

Reorganisation of Endowed Schools.

9. Schemes for application of educational endowments.—The commissioners (appointed as in this act mentioned), by schemes made during the period, in the manner and subject to the provisions in this act mentioned, shall have power, in such manner as may render any educational endowment most conducive to the advancement of the education of boys and girls, or either of them, to alter, and add to any existing, and to make new trusts, directions, and provisions in lieu of any existing, trusts, directions, and provisions which affect such endowment, and the education promoted thereby, including the consolidation of two or more such endowments, or the division of one endowment into two or more endowments.

10. Schemes as to governing bodies.—The commissioners by any scheme relating to any educational endowment made during the period, in the manner and subject to the provisions in this act mentioned, shall have power to alter the constitution, rights, and powers of any governing body of an educational endowment, and to incorporate any such governing body, and to establish a new governing body, corporate or incorporate, with such powers as they think fit, and to remove a governing body, and in the case of any corporation (whether a governing body or not) incorporated solely for the purpose of any endowment dealt with by such scheme, to dissolve such corporation.

11. Educational interests of persons entitled to privileges.—It shall be the duty of the commissioners in every scheme which abolishes or modifies any privileges or educational advantages to which a particular class of persons are entitled, and that whether as inhabitants of a particular area or otherwise, to have due regard to the educational interests of such class of persons.

12. Schemes to extend benefit to girls.—In framing schemes under this act, provision shall be made so far as conveniently may be for extending to girls the benefits of endowments.

13. Saving of interest of foundation, master, governing body, &c.—It shall be the duty of the commissioners to provide in any scheme for saving or making due compensation for the following vested interests; namely:

- (1.) The interest of any boy or girl who was at the time of the passing of this act on the foundation of any endowed school:
- (2.) The tenure of any person of any exhibition dealt with by any such scheme which was held by him at the time of the passing of this act:
- (3.) Such interest as any teacher or officer in any endowed school appointed to his office before the passing of "The Endowed Schools Act, 1868," may have:
- (4.) Such interest as any person may have in any pension or compensation allowance to which he was entitled at the passing of "The Endowed Schools Act, 1868":
- (5.) Such interest as any member of the governing body of any educational endowment appointed to his office before the passing of "The Endowed Schools Act, 1868," may have in any emolument payable to him as such, or in any right of patronage which has a marketable value and is capable of being sold by him:

It shall also be the duty of the commissioners in any scheme relating to any endowed school to have regard to the rights of patronage which may be at the passing of this act exercised by any member of the governing body of such school in consequence of any gift or donation made by him.

14. Not to authorise schemes for interfering with modern endowments, cathedral schools, &c.—Nothing in this act shall authorise the making of any scheme interfering—

- (1.) With any endowment, or part of an endowment (as the case may be), originally given to charitable uses, or to such uses as are referred to in this act, less than fifty years before the commencement of this act, unless the governing body of such endowment assent to the scheme:
- (2.) With the constitution of the governing body of any school wholly or partly maintained out of the endowment of any cathedral or collegiate church, or forming part of the foundation of any cathedral or collegiate church, unless the dean and chapter of such church assent to the scheme:
- (3.) With the constitution of the governing body of any school, which governing body is subject to the jurisdiction of the governing body of the people called Quakers, or of the congregation of United Brethren called Moravians, unless the governing body of such school assented to the scheme :

- (4.) With the constitution of the governing body of any school or with any exhibition (other than one restricted to any schools, or school or district,) forming part of the foundation of any college in Oxford or Cambridge, unless the college assent to the scheme.

15. As to religious education in day schools.—In every scheme (except as hereafter mentioned) relating to any endowed school or educational endowment the Commissioners shall provide that the parent or guardian of, or person liable to maintain or having the actual custody of, any scholar attending such school as a day scholar, may claim, by notice in writing addressed to the principal teacher of such school, the exemption of such scholar from attending prayer or religious worship, or from any lesson or series of lessons on a religious subject, and that such scholar shall be exempted accordingly, and that a scholar shall not by reason of any exemption from attending prayer or religious worship, or from any lesson or series of lessons on a religious subject, be deprived of any advantage or emolument in such endowed school or out of any such endowment to which he would otherwise have been entitled, except such as may by the scheme be expressly made dependent on the scholar learning such lessons.

They shall further provide that if any teacher, in the course of other lessons at which any such scholar is in accordance with the ordinary rules of such school present, teaches systematically and persistently any particular religious doctrine from the teaching of which any exemption has been claimed by such a notice as is in this section before provided, the governing body shall, on complaint made in writing to them by the parent, guardian, or person having the actual custody of such scholar, hear the complainant, and inquire into the circumstances, and, if the complaint is judged to be reasonable, make all proper provisions for remedying the matter complained of.

16. As to religious education in boarding schools.—In every scheme (except as hereinafter mentioned) relating to an endowed school the commissioners shall provide that if the parent or guardian of, or person liable to maintain or having the actual custody of, any scholar who is about to attend such school, and who but for this section could only be admitted as a boarder, desires the exemption of such scholar from attending prayer or religious worship, or from any lesson or series of lessons on a religious subject, but the persons in charge of the boarding houses of such school are not willing to allow such exemption, then it shall be the duty of the governing body of such school to make proper provisions for enabling the scholar to attend the school and have such exemption as a day scholar, without being deprived of any advantage or emolument to which he would otherwise have been entitled, except such as may by the scheme be expressly made dependent on the scholar learning such lessons. And a like provision shall be made for a complaint by such parent, guardian, or person as in the case of a day school.

17. Governing body not to be disqualified on ground of religious opinions.—In every scheme (except as hereinafter mentioned) relating to on any educational endowment the commissioners shall provide that the religious opinions of any person, or his attendance or non-attendance at any particular form of religious worship, shall not in any way affect his qualification for being one of the governing body of such endowment.

18. Masters not to be required to be in holy orders.—In every scheme (except as hereinafter mentioned) relating to an endowed school the commissioners shall provide that a person shall not be disqualified for being a master in such school by reason only of his not being or not intending to be in holy orders.

19. Schools excepted from provisions as to religion.—A scheme relating to—

- (1.) Any school which is maintained out of the endowment of any cathedral or collegiate church, or forms part of the foundation of any cathedral or collegiate church; or
- (2.) Any educational endowment, the scholars educated by which are, in the opinion of the commissioners (subject to appeal to Her Majesty in Council as mentioned in this act) required by the express terms of the original instrument of foundation or of the statutes or regulations made by the founder or under his authority, in his lifetime or within fifty years after his death (which terms have been observed down to the commencement of this act), to learn or to be instructed according to the doctrines or formularies of any particular church, sect, or denomination, is excepted from the foregoing provisions respecting religious instruction, and attendance at religious worship (other than the provisions for the exemption of day scholars from attending prayer or religious worship, or lessons on a religious subject, when such exemption has been claimed on their behalf,) and respecting the qualification of the governing body and masters (unless the governing body, constituted as it would have been if no scheme under this act had been made, assents to such scheme).

And a scheme relating to any such school or endowment shall not, without the consent of the governing body thereof, make any provision respecting the religious instruction or attendance at religious worship of the scholars (except for securing such exemption as aforesaid), or respecting the religious opinions of the governing body or masters.

20. Transfer of jurisdiction of visitors.—In every scheme the commissioners may, if they think fit, provide for the transfer to

Cap. 56.

Cap. 56.

Her Majesty of all rights and powers reserved to, belonging to, claimed by, or capable of being exercised by any person, persons, or body corporate as visitor of the endowed school or educational endowment to which the scheme relates, except in the case of cathedral schools.

They shall also provide that such rights, and powers as aforesaid, if vested in Her Majesty at the commencement of this act, or if transferred to Her Majesty by the scheme, shall be exercised only through and by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales.

21. Abolition of jurisdiction of ordinary as to licensing masters.—In every scheme the commissioners shall provide for the abolition of all jurisdiction of the ordinary relating to the licensing of masters in any endowed school, or of any jurisdiction arising from such licensing.

22. Tenure of office of teachers.—In every scheme the commissioners shall provide for the dismissal at pleasure of every teacher and officer in the endowed school to which the scheme relates, including the principal teacher, with or without a power of appeal in such cases and under such circumstances as to the commissioners may seem expedient.

23. General provisions.—In any scheme the commissioners may insert all powers and provisions that may be thought expedient for carrying its objects into effect.

24. Apportionment of mixed endowments.—Where part of an endowment is an educational endowment within the meaning of this act, and part of it is applicable or applied to other charitable uses, the scheme shall be in conformity with the following provisions (except so far as the governing body of such endowment assent to the scheme departing therefrom); that is to say:

- (1.) The part of the endowment or annual income derived therefrom which is applicable to such other charitable uses shall not be diverted by the scheme from such uses;
- (2.) The part of the endowment or annual income so applicable to such other charitable uses shall be deemed to be the proportion which, in the opinion of the commissioners, subject to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, is the average proportion which has during the three years before the passing of this act been appropriated as regards capital or applied as regards income to such uses, or (if that proportion differs from the proportion which ought in accordance with the express directions of the instrument of foundation or the statutes or regulations during the said three years governing such endowment to have been so appropriated or applied) which ought to have been so appropriated or applied;
- (3.) If the proportion applicable to other charitable uses exceeds one-half of the whole of the endowment, the governing body of such endowment existing at the date of the scheme shall, as far as regards its non-educational purposes, remain unaltered by the scheme;
- (4.) Where the governing body remains so unaltered, that body shall pay or apply for educational purposes such proportion as under the former provisions of this section is applicable to those purposes, or such less sum as may be fixed by the commissioners, subject to appeal to Her Majesty in Council;
- (5.) Where during the said three years any portion of the endowment as existing at the commencement of such three years, or the annual income of such portion, has been accumulated and not applied to any purpose, the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales shall determine whether such portion or income is to be considered, for the purposes of this section, as having been appropriated or applied for educational purposes, or for other charitable uses;
- (6.) Where by reason of the act of Parliament, letters patent, decree, scheme, order, or other instrument during the said three years governing an endowment not having during the said three years been duly carried into effect, or being merely provisional, the preceding provisions of this section are not in the opinion of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales applicable to such endowment, the Charity Commissioners shall determine what proportions shall be considered as applicable to educational purposes, and such other charitable uses respectively.

Subject to the foregoing provisions of this section, the commissioners shall have power by any scheme to deal with such endowment, and with the governing body thereof, in the same manner in all respects as if the whole of it were an educational endowment.

25. New endowment mixed with old buildings, &c.—Where an endowment, or part of an endowment, originally given to charitable uses less than fifty years before the commencement of this act has, by reason of having been spent on school buildings or teachers' residences, or playground or gardens attached to such buildings or residences, become so mixed with an old endowment given more than fifty years before the passing of this act, that in the opinion of the commissioners (subject to appeal to Her Majesty in Council) it cannot conveniently be separated from such old endowment, then the whole endowment shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be an endowment originally given to charitable uses more than fifty years before the commencement of this act.

26. Apportionment of old and new endowments.—Where part of an endowment has been originally given to charitable uses more than fifty years, and another part less than fifty years before the commencement of this act, and the two have not become mixed, as mentioned in this act, so that they cannot conveniently be separated, and the governing body do not assent to the scheme dealing with the modern part of the endowment, the scheme relating to the old part of the endowment shall, subject to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, apportion such parts, and may direct either that the endowment shall be divided and appropriated accordingly in manner provided in the scheme, or that the whole endowment shall be vested in the governing body of one of such parts; and that the portion which is to be applied by the governing body of the other part shall be a debt due to them from the other governing body, and shall be a first charge on the endowment after payment of any charges existing thereon at the date of the scheme.

27. Claims of cathedral schools against Ecclesiastical Commissioners.—Where an educational endowment at the commencement of this act forms or has formed part of the endowment of any cathedral or collegiate church, the commissioners shall inquire into the adequacy of such educational endowment, and may submit to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England proposals for meeting out of the common fund of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners the claims of any school receiving assistance out of the endowment of any such church to have an increased provision made for it in respect of any estates of such church which may have been transferred to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. And the Ecclesiastical Commissioners on assenting to any such proposal or any modification of it may make such provision out of their common fund by such means and in such manner as they think best, and a scheme under this act may with their consent be made for carrying such proposal into effect.

28. As to alteration of schemes.—In any scheme the commissioners may provide for the alteration from time to time of such portions of the scheme as they think expedient by the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales in the exercise of their ordinary jurisdiction, provided such alteration shall not be contrary to anything contained in this act.

29. Apprenticeship fees, &c.—For the purposes of this act endowments attached to any school for the payment of apprenticeship fees or for the advancement in life or for the maintenance or clothing, or otherwise for the benefit of children educated at such school shall be deemed to be educational endowments.

Provided that nothing shall be construed to prevent a scheme relating to any such endowment from providing, if the governing body so desire, for the continued application of such endowment to the same purposes.

30. Application to education of non-educational charities.—In the case of any endowment which is not an educational endowment as defined in this act, but the income of which is applicable wholly or partially to any one or more of the following purposes; namely,—

- Doles in money or kind;
- Marriage portions;
- Redemption of prisoners and captives;
- Relief of poor prisoners for debt;
- Loans;
- Apprenticeship fees;
- Advancement in life, or

Any purposes which have failed altogether or have become insignificant in comparison with the magnitude of the endowment, if originally given to charitable uses in or before the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred; it shall be lawful for the commissioners, with the consent of the governing body, to declare, by a scheme under this act, that it is desirable to apply for the advancement of education the whole or any part of such endowment, and thereupon the same shall for the purposes of this act be deemed to be an educational endowment, and may be dealt with by the same scheme accordingly:

Provided that—

- (1.) In any scheme relating to such endowment due regard shall be had to the educational interests of persons of the same class in life or resident within the same particular area as that of the persons who at the commencement of this act are benefitted thereby:
- (2.) No open space at the commencement of this act enjoyed or frequented by the public shall be enclosed in any other manner than it might have been if this act had not passed.

Procedure for making Schemes.

31. Appointment of commissioners for purposes of this act.—For the purposes of this act it shall be lawful for Her Majesty from time to time to appoint commissioners (in this act referred to as "the commissioners"), and to appoint a secretary to such commissioners, and to remove any commissioners or secretary so appointed and appoint others, but the number of such commissioners shall not exceed three at any one time.

The commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may assign to the commissioners and secretary such salaries, and allow them to employ such assistant commissioners, officers, and clerks, as the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may think proper.

The commissioners, secretary, and other persons so appointed and employed shall not hold office after the expiration of the time limited for the exercise of their powers.

32. Preparation of draught scheme.—The commissioners, after such examination or public inquiry as they think necessary,

Cap. 56.

Cap. 56.

may prepare drafts of schemes for the purposes of this act, subject to the following conditions; namely,

- (1.) Where the gross average annual income of an endowment or of the aggregate educational endowments of an endowed school during the three years next before the first of January one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine,—
 - (a) exceeded ten thousand pounds a year, then before the expiration of twelve months, and where it—
 - (b) exceeded one thousand pounds a year, then before the expiration of six months, after the commencement of this act, any governing body of any such endowment may, if they give to the commissioners such notice as in this section mentioned, prepare and submit to the commissioners in writing a scheme relating to such endowment, and the commissioners shall consider such scheme before they themselves prepare any draft of a scheme relating to the same endowment; and any scheme so prepared by the governing body, and submitted to the commissioners, shall, if approved by them, be adopted and proceeded with by them in the same manner as if it were a draft scheme originally prepared by themselves:
- (2.) The notice to be given by a governing body to the commissioners is a notice of their intention to prepare and submit to the commissioners a draft of a scheme, which notice shall be in writing, and shall be given to the commissioners within two months after the commencement of this act:
- (3.) The certificate of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales shall be conclusive evidence for the purposes of this section of the income of an endowment or aggregate endowments of an endowed school.

33. As to printing and publication of draft schemes.—When the commissioners have prepared the draft of a scheme they shall cause it to be printed, and printed copies of it to be sent to the governing body or governing bodies of the endowment or endowments to which it relates, and to the principal teacher of any endowed school to which it relates, and shall also cause the draft, or a proper abstract of it, to be published and circulated in such manner as they think sufficient for giving information to all persons interested.

34. Objections and suggestions respecting scheme and alternative scheme.—During three months after the first publication of the draught of a scheme the commissioners shall receive any objections or suggestions made to them in writing respecting such scheme, and shall receive any alternative scheme submitted to them by the governing body of any endowment to which the scheme of the commissioners relates.

35. Power to make inquiry into schemes.—At any time after the expiration of the three months the commissioners, or any one of them, if they think fit, may hold an inquiry or they may refer the draft of the scheme and the alternative scheme, if any, to an assistant commissioner, and direct him to hold an inquiry concerning the subject-matter of such scheme or schemes.

36. As to framing of schemes.—As soon as may be after the expiration of the said three months, or the holding of such inquiry by the commissioners or one of them, or the receipt by the commissioners of the report of the assistant commissioner, on the inquiry held by him (as the case may be), the commissioners shall proceed to consider any objections or suggestions made to them in writing respecting the draft scheme, and to consider the alternative scheme (if any), and the report (if any), and thereupon they shall, if they think fit, frame a scheme in such form as they think expedient, and submit it for the approval of the Committee of Council on Education: Provided that where a scheme has been prepared and submitted in pursuance of this act to the commissioners before the commissioners have prepared the draft of a scheme, the commissioners shall, if requested by the governing body which submitted it, submit such scheme with their own to the Committee of Council on Education.

37. Approval of Committee of Council on Education to schemes.—The Committee of Council on Education shall consider all schemes so submitted to them, and may, if they think fit, approve any scheme so submitted, and shall cause the scheme so approved to be published and circulated in such manner as they think sufficient for giving information to all persons interested.

If the committee do not approve a scheme submitted to them the commissioners may frame and submit another scheme in the same manner as if no scheme had been previously framed and submitted; provided that where the Committee of Council on Education have not approved any scheme relating to an endowment, the governing body of which may under this act prepare and submit a draft of a scheme, before the commissioners prepare a draft of a scheme, such governing body may, within three months after notice of such non-approval (if within one month thereafter they give written notice of their intention to the commissioners), submit to the commissioners an amended scheme; and the commissioners shall consider the same before they frame and submit another scheme relating to the same endowment, and such amended scheme of the governing body, if approved by the commissioners, shall be adopted and proceeded with by them as if it were a scheme originally framed by themselves.

38. Consent of colleges or hall.—Where a scheme abolishes any restriction which makes any exhibition tenable only at a particular college or hall in any university, and the exhibition is payable out of property held by such college, or by the university in trust for such college or hall (otherwise than as governing body of a school, or as a bare trustee), the scheme shall not be approved if not less than two-thirds of the governing body of such college or hall dissent therefrom in writing; but in every such case the Committee of Council shall make a special report to Parliament setting out the proposed scheme, and stating the dissent, and the reasons, if any, assigned for it.

39. Appeal to Queen in Council.—If the governing body of any endowment to which a scheme relates, or any person or body corporate directly affected by such scheme, feels aggrieved by the scheme, on the ground—

- (1.) Of any decision of the commissioners in a matter in which an appeal to Her Majesty in Council is given by this act; or
- (2.) Of the scheme not saving or making due compensation for his or their vested interest as required by this act; or
- (3.) Of the scheme being one which is not within the scope of or made in conformity with this act; or
- (4.) (If the governing body are the petitioners) of a scheme not having due regard to any educational interests, to which regard is required by this act to be had, on the abolition or modification of any privileges or educational advantages to which a particular class of persons are entitled:

such governing body, person, or body corporate may within two months after the publication of the scheme when approved petition Her Majesty in Council stating the grounds of the petition, and praying Her Majesty to withhold her approval from the whole or any part of the scheme.

Her Majesty, by order in Council, may refer any such petition for the consideration and advice of five members at least of Her Privy Council, of whom two (not including the Lord President) shall be members of the Judicial Committee, and such five members may, if they think fit, admit counsel to be heard in support of and against the petition, and shall have the same power with respect to the costs of all parties to the petition as the Court of Chancery would have if the petition were a proceeding in that court by way either of petition or information for obtaining a scheme.

Any petition not proceeded with in accordance with the regulations made with respect to petitions presented to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council shall be deemed to be withdrawn.

It shall be lawful for Her Majesty by order in Council to direct that the scheme petitioned against be laid before Parliament, or to remit it to the commissioners with such declaration as the nature of the case may require.

40. Proceedings where scheme is remitted.—Where a scheme is remitted with a declaration the commissioners may either proceed to prepare another scheme in the matter in the same manner as if no scheme had been previously prepared, or may submit for the approval of the Committee of Council on Education such amendments in the scheme as will bring it into conformity with the declaration.

The committee may, if they think fit, approve the scheme with such amendments, and shall publish and circulate the same in the same manner and subject to the same right of petition to Her Majesty in Council as is before directed in the case of the approval of a scheme, and so on from time to time as often as occasion may require.

41. Schemes, &c., to be laid before Parliament.—After the time has expired for a petition to Her Majesty in Council against any scheme, or after Her Majesty in Council has directed a scheme to be laid before Parliament, the scheme shall be forthwith laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament be sitting, or if not, then within three weeks after the beginning of the next ensuing session of Parliament, and after such scheme has lain for forty days before Parliament, then unless within such forty days an address has been presented by one or other of the said Houses praying Her Majesty to withhold her consent from such scheme or any part thereof, it shall be lawful for Her Majesty by order in Council to declare her approbation of such scheme or any part thereof to which such address does not relate.

42. Exception as to schemes for endowments under 100l.—Where a scheme relates to an endowment which during the three years preceding the commencement of this act has had an average annual gross income of not more than one hundred pounds, no petition shall be presented to Her Majesty in Council with reference to such scheme, so far as relates to such an endowment.

The certificate of the Charity Commissioners for England and Wales shall be conclusive evidence for the purposes of this section of the income of an endowment.

43. New scheme of non-approval.—If any scheme or any part thereof is not approved by Her Majesty, then the commissioners may thereupon proceed to prepare another scheme in the matter, and so on from time to time as often as occasion may require.

44. Amendment of schemes.—Schemes may be from time to time framed and approved for amending any scheme approved under this act, and all the provisions of this Act relative to an original scheme shall apply also to an amending scheme mutatis mutandis.

45. Scheme to take effect.—A scheme shall not of itself have any operation, but the same, when and as approved by Her Majesty in Council, shall from the date specified in the scheme, or, if no date is specified, from the date of the order in Council, have full operation and effect in the same manner as if it had been enacted in this act.

46. Effect of scheme.—Upon a scheme coming into operation, every Act of Parliament, letters patent, statute, deed, instrument, trust, or direction relating to the subject matter of the scheme, and expressed by such scheme to be repealed and abrogated, shall, by virtue of the scheme and of this act, be repealed and abrogated from the date in that behalf specified, or if no date is specified, from the date of the scheme coming into operation, and all property purporting to be transferred by such scheme shall, without any other conveyance or act in the law (so far as may be), vest in the transferees, and so far as it cannot be so vested shall be held in trust for the transferees.

Cap. 56.

Cap. 56.

47. Evidence of scheme.—The order in Council approving a scheme shall be conclusive evidence that such scheme was within the scope of and made in conformity with this act, and the validity of such scheme and order shall not be questioned in any legal proceedings whatever.

48. Quorum of commissioners.—A scheme of the commissioners shall not be submitted to the Committee of Council on Education unless two at least of the commissioners have signified in writing their approval of such scheme, but in all other respects one commissioner may act under this act.

49. Power of commissioners, &c., as to procuring evidence. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, ss. 6-9.—Section eleven of "The Charitable Trust Act, 1853" (which relates to the production of documents by public officers), and sections six, seven, eight, and nine of "The Charitable Trust Act, 1855" (relating to evidence, and the attendance and examination of witness), shall extend to the commissioners and assistant commissioners under this act, as if they were the commissioners and inspectors mentioned in those sections.

50. Inquiry by public sittings by commissioners, &c.—Where any commissioner or assistant commissioner holds a local inquiry for the purpose of a scheme under this act, whether before or after the first publication of a draft scheme, he shall for that purpose hold a sitting or sittings in some convenient place in the neighbourhood of the place where the endowment is situate or administered, and thereat take and receive any evidence and information offered, and hear and inquire into any objections or suggestions made or to be made during the sitting or sittings respecting the scheme or the endowment or school, with power from time to time to adjourn any sitting.

Notice shall be published, in such manner as the commissioners direct, of every such sitting (except an adjourned sitting), fourteen days at least before the holding thereof.

51. As to report of assistant commissioners.—The assistant commissioner who holds a local inquiry shall make a report in writing to the commissioners setting forth the result of the inquiry, and where a draft scheme, with or without an alternative scheme, has been referred to him whether in his opinion such draft or alternative scheme, as the case may be, should be approved with or without alteration, and if with any, then with what alteration, and his reasons for the same, and the objections and suggestions, if any, made on the inquiry, and his opinion thereon.

Miscellaneous.

52. Restriction of powers of charity commissioners, court, &c.—During the continuance of the power of making schemes under this act the charity commissioners for England and Wales, or any court or judge, shall not, with respect to any educational endowment which can be dealt with by a scheme under this act, make any scheme or appoint any new trustees without the consent of the Committee of Council on Education.

During the same period the charity commissioners shall have the same power of acting upon application made to them by the commissioners under this act with respect to any educational endowment as they would have if such application had been made by the governing body of such endowment; and the governing body shall conform to any order made or directions given by the Charity Commissioners upon such application.

53. School chapels appropriated for religious worship free from parochial jurisdiction.—The chapel of an endowed school subject to this act, which either has been before or after the commencement of this act consecrated according to law, or is authorised for the time being by the bishop of the diocese in which the chapel is situate, by writing under his hand, to be used as a chapel for such school, shall be deemed to be allowed by law for the performance of public worship and the administration of the sacraments according to the Liturgy of the Church of England and shall be free from the jurisdiction and control of the incumbent of the parish in which such chapel is situate.

54. Quorum of governing body for acting under this act.—The majority of the members of a governing body who are present at a meeting of their body duly constituted shall have power to do anything that may be required to be done by a governing body for the purposes of this act: Provided that this power shall be in addition to and not in restraint of any power which any meeting of such governing body may have independently of this act.

55. Persons acquiring interest after passing of act to be subject to scheme.—Every interest, right, privilege, or preference, or increased interest, right, privilege, or preference, which any person may acquire after the passing of this act in or relative to any endowed school or educational endowment, or in the governing body thereof, or as member of any such governing body, or in or relative to any mastership, office, place, employment, pension, compensation, allowance, exhibition, or emolument in the gift of any such governing body, shall be subject to the provisions of any scheme made under this act; and the governing body of an endowed school or educational endowment shall not, during the continuance of the power of making schemes under this act, begin to build, rebuild, or enlarge any school buildings or teachers' residences or buildings connected therewith, except with the written consent of the commissioners, or under the directions of such a scheme, but this provision shall not prevent them from continuing any works begun before the passing of this act, or from doing anything necessary for the repair or maintenance of buildings or residences existing at the passing of this act.

56. Service of notices.—Notices and documents required to be served on or sent to a governing body for the purposes of this act may be served or sent by being left at the office, if any, of such governing body, or being served on or sent to the chairman, secretary, clerk, or other officer of such governing body, or if there is no office, chairman, secretary, clerk, or officer, or none known to the commissioners (after reasonable inquiry), by being served on or sent to the principal teacher of the school (if any) under such governing body.

57. Service by post.—Notices and documents required to be served or sent for the purposes of this Act may be served or sent by post, and shall be deemed to have been served and received at the time when the letter containing the same would be delivered in the ordinary course of the post; and in proving such service or sending it shall be sufficient to prove that the letter containing the notices or documents was properly addressed and put into the post-office.

58. Expenses of act.—The salaries paid and expenses incurred in carrying into effect this act shall be defrayed out of moneys to be provided by parliament.

59. Duration of powers making schemes.—The powers of making and approving of a scheme under this act shall not, unless continued by Parliament, be exercised after the thirty-first of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, or such further day not later than the thirty-first of December one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, as may be appointed by Her Majesty in Council.

SEAMEN'S CLOTHING ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 57.

An Act to amend the law relating to the Protection of Seamen's Clothing and Property.—[2nd August, 1869.]

Whereas the clothing and property of soldiers are protected by the restraint of the sale thereof, and it is expedient to make the like provisions with respect to seamen's clothing and property:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Seamen's Clothing Act, 1869."

2. Extent of act.—The dockyard towns to which this extends are the towns specified in the schedule to this act, and for the purposes of this act the limits of those dockyard towns shall be the limits specified in the second column of the said schedule.

3. Interpretation of terms.—In this act—

The term "the Admiralty" means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral;

The term "seaman" means every person not being a commissioned, warrant, or subordinate officer who is in or belongs to Her Majesty's navy, and is borne on the books of any one of Her Majesty's ships in commission, and every person, not being an officer as aforesaid, who, being borne on the books of any hired vessels in Her Majesty's service in time of war, is by virtue of any act for the time being in force for the discipline of the navy subject to the provisions of such act;

The term "seamen's property" means any clothes, slops, medals, and necessities, or articles usually deemed to be necessities for sailors on board ship which belong to any seaman.

4. Penalty on purchaser of seamen's clothing in dockyard towns.

—If any person in any dockyard town to which this act extends detains, buys, exchanges, takes on pawn, or receives from any seaman, or any person acting for a seaman, any seaman's property, or solicits or entices any seaman, or is employed by any seaman, to sell, exchange, or pawn, any seaman's property, he shall, unless he proves that he acted in ignorance of the same being seaman's property, or of the person with whom he dealt being or acting for a seaman, or that the same was sold by order of the Admiralty or Commander-in-Chief, be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, and if convicted of a second offence, to the same penalty, or, in the discretion of the justices, to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

5. Penalty on dealer, &c., found in possession of seaman's property and not accounting for it.—If in any dockyard town to which this act extends any seaman's property is found in the possession or keeping of any person, and he is taken or summoned before a justice of the peace (which taking and summoning are hereby authorised), and the justice sees reasonable grounds for believing the property so found to have been stolen, or to have been detained, bought, exchanged, pawned, or otherwise received contrary to the provisions of this act, then if such person does not satisfy the justice that he came by the seaman's property so found, lawfully and without any contravention of this act, he shall be liable, on summary conviction before a justice, to a penalty not exceeding five pounds; and for the purposes of this section seaman's property shall be deemed to be in the possession or keeping of any person if he knowingly has any such property in the actual possession or keeping of any other person, or in any house, building, lodging, apartment, field, or place, open or inclosed, whether occupied by himself or not, and whether the same are so had for his own use or benefit or for the use or benefit of another.

Cap. 56.

Cap 57.

6. Certain parts of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96 incorporated with this act.—The following sections of the act of the session of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter ninety-six, "to consolidate and amend the statute law of England and Ireland relating to larceny, and other similar offences," are hereby incorporated with this act, and shall for the purposes of his act be read as if they were herein enacted, and as if the term "this act" in those sections included the present act; namely, section ninety-nine (relating to the punishment of abettors), section one hundred and three (relating to the apprehension of offenders, and search warrants), and sections one hundred and seven to one hundred and thirteen, both inclusive, and section one hundred and twenty (relating to proceedings in the case of summary offences, and appeals therefrom).

7. Not to prevent persons being indicted under this Act, &c.—Nothing in this act shall prevent any person from being indicted, or being liable under any other act or otherwise to any other or higher penalty or punishment than is provided for any offence by this act, so that no person be punished twice for the same offence.

An Act for amending the Public Schools Act, 1868.—[9th August, 1869.]

SAVINGS BANKS AND POST-OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 59.

Cap. 59.

An Act to amend the Laws relating to the Investments for Savings Banks and Post Office Savings Banks.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas, under the acts mentioned in the first schedule to this act, annuities of the amounts and terminable at the periods mentioned in that schedule have been created in lieu of capital stocks of annuities held by the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, on account of the savings banks and post-office savings banks respectively, and such annuities stand in the books of the governor and company of the Bank of England on the accounts mentioned in the said schedule:

And whereas the payment of such annuities is now made at half-yearly periods, and it is expedient that they should be cancelled, and terminable annuities payable at various periods during the year should be substituted for them:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short title.—This act may be cited as the "Savings Bank Investment Act, 1869."

2. Cancellation of terminable annuities and creation of new annuities.—The commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, by warrant under their hands from time to time, may direct the governor and company of the Bank of England to cancel in their books the annuities mentioned in the first schedule to this act, and in place of such annuities may create and direct the said governor and company to inscribe in their books for the commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt for savings bank and post-office savings banks respectively, equivalent annuities terminable at such date, not later than the fifth of July one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, as the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may think expedient

3. Annuities cancelled.—Upon the issue of any such warrant the annuities therein directed to be cancelled shall, after the date thereof, be cancelled accordingly, and all payments in respect thereof shall thenceforth cease to be payable.

4. Charge of annuities on consolidated fund.—Upon the issue of any such warrant the annuities thereby created shall, after the date thereof, be charged upon the consolidated fund, and shall be payable to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt out of the consolidated fund, or out of the growing produce thereof yearly, or half yearly, at such times in each year as may be fixed by such warrant, or as may be from time to time fixed by any subsequent warrant of the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

5. Warrant authority for Bank of England.—The warrants of the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, issued under the authority of this act, shall be a sufficient authority to the governor and company of the Bank of England for doing the things thereby directed to be done for the purposes of this act, and copies of such warrants shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, if Parliament is then sitting, within ten days after the respective dates thereof, and, if not sitting, within ten days after the next meeting of Parliament.

6. Amount of annuities how ascertained.—The amount of the equivalent annuities so to be created shall be certified to the commissioners of the treasury under the hands of the Comptroller General or assistant comptroller, and of the actuary of the National Debt Office acting under the said commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt.

7. Investment of surplus annuities.—The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt shall apply from time to time such parts of any terminable annuities created under the authority of this act as are not for the time being required to pay the demands of the trustees of savings banks in the purchase of such securities as the commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt are for the time being by law empowered to purchase with other moneys received from savings banks.

8. Repeal of provisions in second schedule to this act.—The acts specified in the second schedule to this act are hereby repealed, to the extent therein mentioned, as from the date therein mentioned, subject and without prejudice to anything already done thereunder.

An Act to protect the Funds of Trades Unions from Embezzlement and Misappropriation.—9th August 1869.

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

1. Provisions of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, to apply to certain associations.—An association of persons having rules, agreements, or practices among themselves as to the terms on which they or any of them will or will not consent to employ or to be employed shall not, by reason only that any of such rules, agreements, or practices may operate in restraint of trade, or that such association is partly for objects other than the objects mentioned in the "Friendly Societies Act," be deemed, for the purposes of the twenty-fourth section of the "Friendly Societies Act, 1855," for the punishment of frauds and impositions, to be a society established for a purpose which is illegal, or not to be a friendly society within the meaning of the forty-fourth section of the said act.

2. Duration of act.—This act shall not continue in force after the last day of August, one thousand eight hundred and seventy

3. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Trades Union s Funds Protection Act."

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 62.

Cap. 62.

An Act for the Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt, for the punishment of fraudulent Debtors, and for other purposes.—[9th August, 1869.]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows :

Preliminary.

1. Short title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Debtors Act, 1869."

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Commencement and construction of act.—This act shall no come into operation until the day on which "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," comes into operation, which day is hereinafter referred to as the commencement of this act, and words and expressions defined or explained in "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," shall have the same meaning in this act.

PART I.

Abolition of Imprisonment for Debt.

4. Abolition of imprisonment for debt, with exceptions.—With the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, no person shall, after the commencement of this act, be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money.

There shall be excepted from the operation of the above enactment:

1. Default in payment of a penalty, or sum in the nature of penalty, other than a penalty in respect of any contract:
2. Default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace:
3. Default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity and ordered to pay by a court of equity any sum in his possession or under his control.
4. Default by an attorney or solicitor in payment of costs when ordered to pay costs for misconduct as such, or in payment of a sum of money when ordered to pay the same in his character of an officer of the court making the order:
5. Default in payment for the benefit of creditors of any portion of a salary or other income in respect of the payment of which any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy is authorised to make an order:
6. Default in payment of sums in respect of the payment o which orders are in this act ordered to be made:

Provided, first, that no person shall be imprisoned in any case excepted from the operation of this section for a longer period than one year; and, secondly, that nothing in this section shall alter the effect of any judgment or order of any court for payment of money except as regards the arrest and imprisonment o the person making default in paying such money.

5. Saving of power of committal for small debts.—Subject to the provisions hereinafter mentioned, and to the prescribed rules any court may commit to prison for a term not exceeding six weeks, or until payment of the sum due, any person who makes default in payment of any debt or instalment of any debt due from him in pursuance of any order or judgment of that or any other competent court.

Provided—(1.) That the jurisdiction by this section given of committing a person to prison shall, in the case of any court other than the superior courts of law and equity, be exercised only subject to the following restrictions; that is to say,

- (a.) Be exercised only by a judge or his deputy, and by an order made in open court, and showing on its face the ground on which it is issued;
 - (b.) Be exercised only as respects a judgment of a superior court of law or equity when such judgment does not exceed fifty pounds, exclusive of costs.
 - (c.) Be exercised only as respects a judgment of a County Court by a County Court judge or his deputy.
- (2.) That such jurisdiction shall only be exercised where it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the person making default either has or has had since the date of the order or judgment the means to pay the sum in respect of which he has made default, and has refused or neglected, or refuses or neglects, to pay the same.

Proof of the means of the persons making default may be given in such manner as the court thinks just; and for the purposes of such proof the debtor and any witnesses may be summoned and examined on oath, according to the prescribed rule.

Any jurisdiction by this section given to the superior courts may be exercised by a judge sitting in chambers, or otherwise, in the prescribed manner.

For the purposes of this section any court may direct any debt due from any person in pursuance of any order or judgment of that or any other competent court to be paid by instalments, and may from time to time rescind or vary such order:

Persons committed under this section by a Superior Court may be committed to the prison in which they would have been confined if arrested on a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, and every order of committal by any Superior Court shall, subject to the prescribed rules, be issued, obeyed, and executed in the like manner as such writ.

This section, so far as it relates to any County Court, shall be deemed to be substituted for sections ninety-eight and ninety-nine of the County Court Act, 1846, and that act and the acts amending the same shall be construed accordingly, and shall extend to orders made by the County Court with respect to sums due in pursuance of any order or judgment of any court other than a County Court.

No imprisonment under this section shall operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of any debt or demand or cause of action, or deprive any person of any right to take out execution against the lands, goods, or chattels of the person imprisoned, in the same manner as if such imprisonment had not taken place.

Any person imprisoned under this section shall be discharged out of custody upon a certificate signed in the prescribed manner to the effect that he has satisfied the debt or instalment of a debt in respect of which he was imprisoned, together with the prescribed costs (if any).

6. Power under certain circumstances to arrest defendant about to quit England.—After the commencement of this act a person shall not be arrested upon mesne process in any action.

Where the plaintiff in any action in any of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of law at Westminster, in which, if brought before the commencement of this act, the defendant would have been liable to arrest, proves at any time before final judgment by evidence on oath, to the satisfaction of a judge of one of those courts, that the plaintiff has good cause of action against the defendant to the amount of fifty pounds or upwards, and that there is probable cause for believing that the defendant is about to quit England unless he be apprehended, and that the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action, such judge may in the prescribed manner order such defendant to be arrested and imprisoned for a period not exceeding six months, unless and until he has sooner given the prescribed security, not exceeding the amount claimed in the action, that he will not go out of England without the leave of the court.

Where the action is for a penalty or sum in the nature of a penalty, other than a penalty in respect of any contract, it shall not be necessary to prove that the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action, and the security given (instead of being that the defendant will not go out of England) shall be to the effect that any sum recovered against the defendant in the action shall be paid, or that the defendant shall be rendered to prison.

7. Discharge of persons in custody at the commencement of this act.—Where any person is, at the commencement of this act, in custody in pursuance of a writ, attachment, or other process in any case in which he would not be liable to be arrested or imprisoned after the commencement of this act, such person shall, at the commencement of this act, be discharged from such custody without payment of any fees, but his arrest, imprisonment, or discharge shall not affect the creditor's rights or remedies for enforcing the payment of any money due to him, or deprive the creditor of the benefit of any charge or security on any property of the debtor.

Where at the commencement of this act special bail has been given in any action the defendant in which after the commencement of this act cannot be imprisoned on making default in satisfying the judgment recovered against him in such action, the condition of such bail, instead of being that the judgment shall be satisfied or the defendant rendered to prison, shall be deemed to be that the defendant shall not go out of England without leave of the court.

8. Saving for sequestration against property.—Sequestration

Cap. 62.

Cap. 62.

against the property of a debtor may, after the commencement of this act, be issued by any court of equity in the same manner as if such debtor had been actually arrested.

9. Saving for Bankruptcy Act 1869.—Nothing in this part of this Act shall in any way affect any right or power, under The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to arrest or imprison any person.

10. Definition of "prescribed."—In this part of this act the term "prescribed" means as follows:—

As respects the Superior Courts of common law, prescribed by general rules to be made in pursuance of "The Common Law Procedure Act, 1852:"

As respects the Superior Courts of equity, prescribed by general rules and orders to be made in pursuance of the act of the session of the fifteenth and sixteenth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter eighty;

As respects the County Courts, prescribed by general rules to be made under the "County Court Act, 1856"; and

As respects any other court, prescribed by the rules to be made with the approval of the Lord Chancellor, by the persons having power to make rules in relation to the practice of such court; or if there be no such persons, by the judge of such court:

And general rules and orders may respectively be made by such authorities as aforesaid, for the purpose of carrying into effect this part of this act.

PART II.

Punishment of Fraudulent Debtors.

11. Punishment of fraudulent debtors.—Any person adjudged bankrupt, and any person whose affairs are liquidated by arrangement in pursuance of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," shall, in each of the cases following, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; that is to say,

1. If he does not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, fully and truly discover to the trustee administering his estate for the benefit of his creditors all his property, real and personal, and how, and to whom, and for what consideration, and when he has disposed of any part thereof, except such part as has been disposed of in the ordinary way of his trade (if any), or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud;
2. If he does not deliver up to such trustee, or as he directs, all such part of his real and personal property as is in his custody or under his control, and which he is required by law to deliver up, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud;
3. If he does not deliver up to such trustee, or as he directs, all books, documents, papers, and writings in his custody, or under his control relating to his property or affairs, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud;
4. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he conceals any part of his property to the value of ten pounds or upwards, or conceals any debt due to or from him, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud;
5. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he fraudulently removes any part of his property of the value of ten pounds or upwards;
6. If he makes any material omission in any statement relating to his affairs, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud;
7. If, knowing or believing that a false debt has been proved by any person under the bankruptcy or liquidation, he fail for the period of a month to inform such trustee as aforesaid thereof;
8. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation he prevents the production of any book, document, paper, or writing affecting or relating to his property or affairs, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to conceal the state of his affairs or to defeat the law;
9. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he conceals, destroys, mutilates, or falsifies, or is privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation, or falsification of any book or document affecting or relating to his property or affairs, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to conceal the state of his affairs or to defeat the law;
10. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he makes or is privy to the making of any false entry in any book or document affecting or relating to his property or affairs, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to conceal the state of his affairs or to defeat the law;
11. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he fraudulently parts with, alters, or makes any omission, or is privy to the fraudulently parting with, altering, or making any omission in any document affecting or relating to his property or affairs:

Cap. 62.

Cap. 62.

12. If after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or at any meeting of his creditors within four months next before such presentation or commencement, he attempts to account for any part of his property by fictitious losses or expenses:

13. If within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, he, by any false representation or other fraud, has obtained any property on credit and has not paid for the same:

14. If within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, he, being a trader, obtains, under the false pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary way of his trade, any property on credit and has not paid for the same, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud:

15. If within four months next before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, he, being a trader, pawns, pledges, or disposes of otherwise than in the ordinary way of his trade any property which he has obtained on credit and has not paid for, unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud:

16. If he is guilty of any false representation or other fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of his creditors or any of them to any agreement with reference to his affairs or his bankruptcy or liquidation.

12. Penalty for absconding with property.—If any person who is adjudged a bankrupt or has his affairs liquidated by arrangement after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against him or the commencement of the liquidation, or within four months before such presentation or commencement, quits England and takes with him, or attempts or makes preparation for quitting England and for taking with him, any part of his property to the amount of twenty pounds or upwards, which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors, he shall (unless the jury is satisfied that he had no intent to defraud) be guilty of felony, punishable with imprisonment for a time not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

13. Penalty on fraudulently obtaining credit, &c.—Any person shall in each of the cases following be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be liable to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour; that is to say,

(1) If in incurring any debt or liability he has obtained credit under false pretences, or by means of any other fraud:

(2) If he has, with intent to defraud his creditors, or any of them, made or caused to be made any gift, delivery, or transfer of or any charge on his property:

(3) If he has, with intent to defraud his creditors, concealed or removed any part of his property since or within two months before the date of any unsatisfied judgment or order for payment of money obtained against him:

14. False claim, &c., a misdemeanor.—If any creditor in any bankruptcy or liquidation by arrangement or composition with creditors in pursuance with "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," wilfully and with intent to defraud makes any false claim, or any proof, declaration, or statement of account which is untrue in any material particular, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable with imprisonment not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour.

15. Debts incurred by fraud.—Where a debtor makes any arrangement or composition with his creditors under the provisions of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," he shall remain liable for the unpaid balance of any debt which he incurred or increased, or whereof before the date of the arrangement or composition he obtained forbearance, by any fraud, provided the defrauded creditor has not assented to the arrangement or composition otherwise than by proving his debt and accepting dividends.

16. Order by court for prosecution on report of trustee.—Where a trustee in any bankruptcy reports to any court exercising jurisdiction in bankruptcy that in his opinion a bankrupt has been guilty of any offence under this act, or where the court is satisfied upon the representation of any creditor or member of the committee of inspection that there is ground to believe that the bankrupt has been guilty of any offence under this act, the court shall, if it appears to the court that there is a reasonable probability that the bankrupt may be convicted, order the trustee to prosecute the bankrupt for such offence.

17. Expenses of prosecutions.—Where the prosecution of the bankrupt under this act is ordered by any court, then, on the production of the order of the court, the expenses of the prosecution shall be allowed, paid, and borne as expenses of prosecutions for felony are allowed, paid, and borne.

18. Application of Vexatious Indictments Act to offences under this act.—Every misdemeanor under the second part of this act shall be deemed to be an offence within and subject to the provisions of the act of the session of the twenty-second and twenty-third years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter seventeen, intituled "An act to prevent Vexatious Indictments for certain Misdemeanors;" and when any person is charged with any such offence before any justice or justices, such justice or justices shall take into consideration any evidence adduced before him or them tending to show that the act charged was not committed with a guilty intent.

19. Form of indictment.—In an indictment for an offence under this act it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged, in the words of this act specifying the offence, or as near thereto as circumstances admit, without alleging or setting forth any debt, act of bankruptcy, trading, adjudication, or any proceedings in, or order, warrant, or document of any court acting under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869."

20. Quarter sessions to have jurisdiction in respect of offences under act.—So much of the act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of Her Majesty's reign (chapter thirty-eight), "to define the jurisdiction of justices in general and quarter sessions of the peace," as excludes from the jurisdiction of justices and recorders at sessions of the peace or adjournments thereof the trial of persons for offences against any provision of the laws relating to bankrupts, is hereby repealed as from the passing of this act; and any offence under this act shall be deemed to be within the jurisdiction of such justices and recorders.

21. Mayors, &c., disqualified by arrangements.—The provisions of the act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of William the Fourth, chapter seventy-six, for the regulation of municipal corporations, sections fifty-two and fifty-three, as to the disqualification of mayors, aldermen, and town councillors having been declared bankrupt or having compounded by deed with their creditors, shall extend to every arrangement or composition by a mayor, alderman, or town councillor with his creditors under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," whether the same is made by deed or otherwise.

22. Justices of the peace becoming bankrupt or arranging with creditors.—If any person being assigned by her Majesty's commission to act as a justice of the peace is adjudged bankrupt, or makes any arrangement or composition with his creditors under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," he shall be and remain incapable of acting as a justice of the peace until he has been newly assigned by Her Majesty in that behalf.

23. Punishments under this act cumulative.—Where any person is liable under any other Act of Parliament or at common law to any punishment or penalty for any offence made punishable by this act, such person may be proceeded against under such other Act of Parliament or at common law or under this act, so that he be not punished twice for the same offence.

PART III.

Warrants of Attorney, Cognovits, and Orders for Judgment.

24. Warrants of attorney and cognovit actionem to be executed in the presence of an attorney on behalf of the person.—After the commencement of this act, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action or cognovit actionem given by any person shall not be of any force unless there is present some attorney of one of the superior courts on behalf of such person expressly named by him and attending at his request to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit before the same is executed, which attorney shall subscribe his name as a witness to the due execution thereof, and thereby declare himself to be attorney for the person, executing the same, and state that he subscribes as such attorney.

25. Warrant, &c., not formally executed invalid.—A warrant of attorney to confess judgment or cognovit actionem not executed in manner aforesaid shall not be rendered valid by proof that the person executing the same did in fact understand the nature and effect thereof, or was fully informed of the same.

26. Filing of warrant of attorney and cognovit actionem.—Where in an action a warrant of attorney to confess judgment or a cognovit actionem is given, and the same, or a true copy thereof, is not filed with the officer acting as clerk of the dockets and judgments in the Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days next after the execution thereof as required by the act of the third year of the reign of King George the Fourth (chapter thirty-nine), "for preventing frauds upon creditors by secret warrants of attorney to confess judgment," the same shall be deemed fraudulent and shall be void; and if any such warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem so filed was given subject to any defeasance or condition, such defeasance or condition shall be written on the same paper or parchment with the warrant or cognovit before the filing thereof, otherwise the warrant or cognovit shall be void.

27. Filing of judge's order to enter up judgment.—Where a judge's order made by consent is given by a defendant in a personal action whereby the plaintiff is authorised forthwith or at any future time to sign or enter up judgment, or to issue or to take out execution, whether such order is made subject to any defeasance or condition or not, then if the action is in the Court of Queen's Bench the order, and if the action is in any other court a true copy of the order, shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such consent being given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the defendant, be filed with the officer acting as clerk of the dockets and judgments in the Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the making of the order, otherwise the order and any judgment signed or entered up thereon, and any execution issued or taken out on such judgment, shall be void.

28. Application of 3 Geo. 4, c. 39, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 66, to judge's orders.—The provisions of the said Act of the third year of King George the Fourth, and of the Act of the session of the sixth and seventh years of Her Majesty's reign (chapter sixty-six), "to enlarge the provisions of an Act for preventing frauds upon creditors by secret warrants of attorney to confess judgment," for liberty to file a warrant of attorney or cognovit actionem, or a copy thereof, with the clerk of the dockets and judgments, and for that clerk to make certain entries and search in relation thereto, and for entering satisfaction thereon, and for fees for search, and filing and taking office copies, shall extend and be applicable to every such judge's order.

29. Exemption from act of foreign attachment.—Nothing in this Act contained shall affect the custom of foreign attachment as exercised by any competent court, or the proceedings in relation to such custom.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 63.

An Act to amend the Metropolitan Poor Act 1867.—[9th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 64.

An Act to appoint additional Commissioners for executing the Acts for granting a Land Tax and other rates and taxes.—[9th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 65.

An Act for appointing Commissioners to inquire into the existence of corrupt Practices amongst the Freemen Electors of the city of Dublin.—[9th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 66.

An Act to continue and amend an Act to defray the charge of the Pay, Clothing, and contingent and other expenses of the Disembodied Militia in Great Britain and Ireland; to grant allowances in certain cases to Subaltern Officers, Adjutants, Paymasters, Quartermasters, Surgeons, Assistant Surgeons, and Surgeons' Mates of the Militia; and to authorise the employment of the Non-commissioned Officers.—[9th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 67.

An Act to provide for Uniformity in the Assessment of Rateable Property in the Metropolis.—[9th August, 1869.]

EVIDENCE AMENDMENT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 68.

An Act for the further Amendment of the Law of Evidence.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas the discovery of truth in courts of justice has been signally promoted by the removal of restrictions on the admissibility of witnesses, and it is expedient to amend the law of evidence with the object of still further promoting such discovery:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Sect. 4 of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and part of sect. 2 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, repealed.—The fourth section of chapter ninety-nine of the statutes passed in the fourteenth and fifteenth years of Her present Majesty, and so much of the second section of the "Evidence Amendment Act, 1853," as is contained in the words "or in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery," are hereby repealed.

2. Parties in actions for breach of promise of marriage.—The parties to any action for breach of promise of marriage shall be competent to give evidence in such action: Provided always, that no plaintiff in any action for breach of promise of marriage shall recover a verdict unless his or her testimony shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.

3. Parties and their husbands and wives to be witnesses in suits for adultery.—The parties to any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, shall be competent to give evidence in such proceeding: Provided that no witness in any proceeding, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery.

4. Persons objecting to take oath may be allowed to make declaration, and be triable for perjury.—If any person called to give evidence in any court of justice, whether in a civil or criminal proceeding, shall object to take an oath, or shall be objected to as incompetent to take an oath, such person shall, if the presiding judge is satisfied that the taking of an oath would have no binding effect on his conscience, make the following promise and declaration:

Cap. 62.

Cap. 68.

"I solemnly promise and declare that the evidence given by me to the court shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

And any person who, having made such promise and declaration, shall wilfully and corruptly give false evidence, shall be liable to be indicted, tried, and convicted for perjury as if he had taken an oath.

5. Short title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as the "Evidence Further Amendment Act, 1869."

6. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 69.

An Act to provide for the better Liquidation of certain Loans raised under the Guarantee of Her Majesty for the Service of the Colony of Jamaica.—[9th August, 1869.]

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES (ANIMALS) ACT.

39 & 33 VICT. CAP. 70.

Cap. 70.

An Act to consolidate, amend, and make perpetual the Acts for preventing the introduction or spreading of Contagious or Infectious Diseases among Cattle and other Animals in Great Britain.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to confer on Her Majesty's most honourable Privy Council power to take such measures as may appear from time to time necessary to prevent the introduction into Great Britain of contagious or infectious diseases among cattle, sheep, and other animals, by prohibiting or regulating the importation of foreign animals, and it is further expedient to provide against the spreading of such diseases in Great Britain, and to consolidate and amend and make perpetual the acts relating thereto, and to make such other provisions as are contained in this act:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

PART I.

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as The Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act, 1869.

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Ireland.

3. Division of act into parts.—This act is divided into parts, as follows:

Part I. Preliminary.

Part II. Local authorities.

Part III. Foreign animals.

Part IV. Discovery and prevention of disease.

Part V. Slaughter in cattle plague: compensation.

Part VI. Orders of Council and of local authorities.

Part VII. Lands.

Part VIII. Expenses of local authorities.

Part IX. Offences and legal proceedings.

Part X. Scotland.

4. Repeal of acts in schedule.—The acts described in the first schedule to this act are hereby repealed, but this repeal shall not extend to Ireland, or affect the past operation of any of those acts, or affect any order of Her Majesty in Council made, or any order or regulation of the Privy Council or of a local authority made, or any licence granted, or any committee or sub-committee constituted, or any appointment made, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued, or any rate or mortgage made, or the validity or invalidity of anything done or suffered, under any of those acts, before the passing of this act; nor shall this repeal interfere with the institution or prosecution of any proceeding in respect of any offence committed against, or any penalty or forfeiture incurred under, any of the acts repealed by this act, or any order or regulation made thereunder, or take away or abridge any protection or benefit conferred or secured by any of those acts in relation to anything done thereunder before the passing of this act; and, notwithstanding the repeal by this act of any of those acts, every local authority constituted thereby or thereunder shall (subject to any provision of this act altering the local authority or the constitution thereof in any case) continue as if this act had not been passed; and every such order, regulation, licence, committee, sub-committee, and appointment as aforesaid shall continue and be as if this act had not been passed, but so that the same may be revoked, altered, or otherwise dealt with under this act as if the same had been made, granted, or constituted under this act.

5. Definition, &c., of Privy Council.—In this act the term "the Privy Council" means the lords and others of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council.

All or any powers by this act conferred on the Privy Council may be exercised by those lords and others or any two or more of them.

Powers by this act conferred on the Privy Council may, as regards the making of orders affecting only specified ports, towns, or places, or parts thereof, and as regards the issuing and revocation of licences under any Order of Council, be exercised by the Lord President of the Council or one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Cap. 68.

6. Interpretation of terms as to animals, &c.—In this act—

The term "cattle" means bulls, cows, oxen, heifers, and calves:

The term "animal" means, except where it is otherwise expressed, cattle, sheep, goats, and swine:

The term "foreign," as applied to cattle or animals, means brought from any place out of the United Kingdom:

The term "cattle plague" means the rinderpest, or disease commonly called the cattle plague:

The term "contagious or infectious disease" includes cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, sheep-pox, sheep-scab, and glanders, and any disease which the Privy Council from time to time by order declare to be a contagious or infectious disease for the purposes of this Act:

The term "railway company" includes a company or person working a railway under lease or otherwise:

The term "person" includes a body corporate or unincorporate.

7. Definition of boroughs and other places.—In this act—

The term "borough" means a place which is for the time being subject to the act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of the reign of King William the Fourth (chapter seventy-six), "to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales," or which is a town or place having under any general or local act of parliament or otherwise a separate police establishment:

The term "county" does not include a county of a city or county of a town, but includes any riding, division, or parts of a county, having a separate commission of the peace:

The term "metropolis" includes all parishes and places in which the Metropolitan Board of Works have or had power to levy a main drainage rate.

For the purposes of this act, the liberty of St. Albans, the liberty of the Isle of Ely, and the soke of Peterborough shall respectively be deemed separate counties, but all other liberties and franchises of counties shall be considered as forming part of the county by which they are surrounded, or if partly surrounded by two or more counties, then as forming part of that county with which they have the longest common boundary.

Every place that is not a borough, a county, or part of the metropolis as respectively defined in this act, or is not separately mentioned in the second schedule to this act, shall be deemed to form part of a county as defined in this act to the county rate whereof it is assessed, or if it is not so assessed, then of the county within which it is situate.

8. Effect of schedules.—The schedules to this act shall be construed and have effect as part of this act.

Local Authorities.

9. Local authorities in schedule.—For the purposes of this act, the respective districts, authorities, rates or funds, and officers described in the second schedule to this act, shall be the district, the local authority, the local rate, and the clerk of the local authority.

10. Local authority in City of London.—Notwithstanding anything in this act or the second schedule thereto, within the City of London, and the liberties thereof the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the City of London shall be the local authority, and the town clerk shall be the clerk of the local authority, and the consolidated rate shall be the local rate, but the City of London and the liberties thereof shall nevertheless be deemed part of the metropolis for the purposes of the local rate described in the second schedule to this act in relation to the metropolis.

11. Appointment of committees.—With respect to committees of a local authority, the following provisions shall have effect:—

- (1.) A local authority shall form a committee or committees, and may delegate to any such committee all or any powers conferred on the local authority by this act, except the power to make a rate:
- (2.) A local authority may from time to time revoke or alter any power given by them to a committee:
- (3.) A local authority may appoint and designate any such committee as their executive committee for the purposes of this act:
- (4.) Such an executive committee shall have all the powers of the local authority under this act, except the power to make a rate, and may appoint a sub-committee or sub-committees, and delegate to them all or any powers of the executive committee, with or without conditions or restrictions, and from time to time revoke or alter any such delegation, and fix the quorum, and add to or diminish the number of the members, or otherwise alter the constitution of a sub-committee, and lay down rules for the guidance of a sub-committee, who shall act accordingly:
- (5.) Proceedings of a committee or sub-committee shall not be invalidated by any vacancy in the committee or sub-committee, or, in case of a committee appointed by general or quarter sessions of a county, by the termination of the sessions at which they were appointed:
- (6.) In case of the formation of two or more committees, they shall act according to rules laid down for their guidance by the local authority:
- (7.) The regulations contained in the third schedule to this act shall have effect with respect to committees and sub-committees.

Cap 70.

Cap. 70.

Inspectors and Officers.

12. Appointment of inspectors and other officers by local authorities.—Every local authority shall from time to time appoint so many inspectors and other officers as appear to the local authority necessary for the execution of this act, and shall assign them such duties and award them such salaries or allowances as the local authority think fit, and may at any time revoke any appointment so made, but so that every local authority shall at all times keep appointed at least one inspector.

13. Removal of Inspectors.—The Privy Council, if satisfied on inquiry that an inspector appointed by a local authority is incompetent, or has been guilty of misconduct or neglect in the discharge of his duty, may, if they think fit, direct his removal, and thereupon he shall cease to be an inspector for the purposes of this act.

14. Reports to Privy Council, &c.—Every local authority, and every inspector appointed by a local authority, shall make such reports to the Privy Council as the Privy Council from time to time require.

PART III.

Foreign Animals.

15. Power to define ports.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order define the limits of ports for the purposes of this part of this act.

16. Power to prohibit landing of foreign animals.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order, in relation to foreign animals, or to any specified kind of foreign animals, or to foreign animals, or any specified kind thereof, brought from any specified country or place, prohibit the landing thereof either generally, or in any specified port, or in any defined part thereof, or elsewhere than in some specified port or ports, or than in some defined part or parts thereof.

This section shall extend to horses and other animals not within the definition of animals in this act.

17. Power to apply regulations in schedule to landing in specified cases.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order apply to the landing, either generally, or with specified exceptions, or in some specified port, or in some defined part thereof, of foreign animals, or of any specified kind of foreign animals, or of foreign animals, or any specified kind thereof, brought from any specified country or place, and to the movement and disposal thereof when landed, the regulations contained in the fourth schedule to this act, or any of them.

18. Power to vary regulations.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order, in relation to foreign animals, or to any specified kind of foreign animals, or to foreign animals, or any specified kind thereof, brought from any specified country or place, add to or vary the regulations contained in the fourth schedule to this act.

19. Provision respecting animals within port, &c.—Where the regulations contained in the fourth schedule to this act, or any of them (with or without addition or variation), are in operation in respect of a port or a defined part thereof, then all animals for the time being within that port or defined part shall, subject to any order of the Privy Council to the contrary, be deemed foreign animals, and the same regulations shall apply thereto accordingly.

20. Power to impose quarantine.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order make such regulations as they think expedient for imposing conditions on the landing of or for subjecting to inspection or to quarantine foreign animals, or any specified kind of foreign animals, or foreign animals, or any specified kind thereof, brought from any specified country or place.

This section shall extend to horses and other animals not within the definition of animals in this act.

21. Punishment for wrongful landing, &c.—If any person lands or attempts to land any foreign animal (including any horse or other animal not within the definition of animals in this act) in contravention of any order of the Privy Council, the animal shall be forfeited in like manner as goods the importation whereof is prohibited by the acts relating to the customs are liable to be forfeited; and the person so offending shall be liable to such penalties as are imposed on persons importing or attempting to import goods the importation whereof is prohibited by the acts relating to the customs, without prejudice to any proceeding against him under this act or any such order, but so that no person be punished twice for the same offence.

22. Return of diseases among foreign animals to be published in London Gazette.—There shall be published in the London Gazette once in every month, under the direction of the Privy Council, a return of the number of foreign animals brought by sea to any port in Great Britain which on inspection on landing within the then last preceding month have been found to be affected with any contagious or infectious disease, specifying the disease and the ports from which and to which such animals are brought, and the mode in which such animals have been disposed of.

23. Power to provide, &c., wharves, lairs, &c.—A local authority may provide, erect, and fit up wharves, lairs, sheds, markets, houses, and places for the landing, reception, sale, and slaughter of foreign animals.

24. Incorporation of markets, &c., Clauses Act, 1847.—There shall be incorporated with this part of this act "The Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847;" and for the purposes of the application and construction of that act in conjunction with this part of this act any place provided by a local authority under this part of this act for the landing, reception, sale, or slaughter of foreign animals shall be deemed a market, and this part of this act shall be deemed the special act, and the prescribed limits shall be deemed to be the limits of the lands acquired for the purposes of this part of this act; and byelaws shall be approved by the Privy Council, which approval shall be sufficient, without any other approval or any allowance thereof (notice of application for such approval being nevertheless given, and proposed byelaws being published before application for approval, in like manner as under that act notice of application for allowance and publication before that application are required to be made).

25. Charges for use of wharves, &c.—A local authority may charge for the use of any wharf, lair, shed, market, house, or place provided by them under this part of this act such sums as they from time to time by bye law appoint.

26. Power to give as security for borrowed money, charges, estates, &c.—A local authority, on exercising for the purposes of this part of this act the borrowing powers vested in them under this act, may, if they think fit, give as security for repayment of money borrowed with interest (either together with the local rate, if any, or separately therefrom) the charges which they are authorised to make under this part of this act, and any estates, revenues, or funds belonging to them and not otherwise appropriated by law.

27. Separate account and application of money received.—All money received by a local authority from charges made by them under this part of this act shall be carried to a separate account, and shall be applied in payment of interest on money borrowed by them for the purposes of this part of this act, and in repayment of the principal thereof, and subject thereto towards discharge of expenses incurred by them in the execution of this act.

28. Special provisions respecting metropolis.—With respect to the metropolis, notwithstanding anything in this act or in the second schedule thereto, the following provisions shall have effect:

- (1.) The mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London shall, for the purposes of this part of this act, be exclusively the local authority in and for the metropolis.
- (2.) The mayor, aldermen, and commons, on exercising for the purposes of this part of this act the borrowing powers vested in a local authority under this Act, may borrow on the credit of the property on the credit whereof they are authorised to borrow by the Metropolitan Market Act, 1865, and the money so borrowed may be secured in the manner and subject and according to the provisions in that act authorised and contained:
- (3.) All money received by the mayor, aldermen, and commons from charges made by them under this part of this act shall (subject to the application thereof as in this part of this act directed in payment of interest on and in repayment of principal of money borrowed for the purposes of this part of this act) be applied in repayment of the principal of money borrowed by them under The Metropolitan Market Act, 1857 and 1865, and subject thereto in discharge of expenses incurred by them in the execution of this part of this act.
- (4.) From and after the opening for public use of a market provided by the mayor, aldermen, and commons under this part of this act to the satisfaction of the Privy Council (declared by order), the maximum tolls, dues, and payments that may be taken under the Metropolitan Market Act 1857, in respect of the animals mentioned in the fifth schedule to this act, shall be the sums in that schedule specified in lieu of those specified in schedule A. to that act.

29. Provision on failure of corporation of London to provide market.—Provided that if the mayor, aldermen, and commons of the city of London do not before the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two provide and open for public use a market for the purposes of this part of this Act to the satisfaction of the Privy Council (declared by order), then on and after that day the following consequences shall ensue:

- (1.) The provision of this part of this Act making the mayor, aldermen, and commons exclusively for the purposes of this part of this act the local authority in and for the metropolis shall cease to operate:
- (2.) The enactment in section fifteen of the Metropolitan Market Act 1857, that no new market for the sale of cattle or horses shall be opened in the cities of London or Westminster, or the liberties thereof, or in the borough of Southwark, or at any place distant less than seven miles in a straight line from Saint Paul's Cathedral in the city of London, shall not prevent any local authority or person from establishing a market for the purposes of this part of this act in or at any place named or defined in that section.

30. Continuance of defined part where market, &c., provided.—Where a local authority, with the approval of the Privy Council, have before or after the passing of this act provided, erected, and fitted up, within a part of a port defined by the Privy Council as a place where foreign animals may be landed, any wharf, lair, shed, market, house, or place for the landing, reception, sale, or slaughter of foreign animals, it shall not be lawful for the Privy Council (as long as importation of foreign animals at that port is allowed, but under restriction) to revoke the definition of the part or parts of that port at which foreign animals may be landed, or to alter it so as to exclude therefrom any part of the site of such wharf, lair, shed, market, house, or place, except with the consent of the local authority; and if any railway company have provided, erected, or fitted up any such wharves, lairs, sheds, markets, houses, or places, the same may, with the approval of the Privy Council, be used for the purposes of this part of this act.

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

PART IV.

Discovery and prevention of disease.

31. Inspector to proceed on information.—An inspector of a local authority, on receiving information of the supposed existence of cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, or sheep-pox, or having reasonable ground to suspect that any of those diseases exists in any place within his district, shall proceed to that place with all practicable speed, and execute and discharge the powers and duties by or under this act conferred and imposed on him as inspector.

32. Power of entry for inspector, &c.—An inspector or other officer of a local authority authorised to act in the execution of this act may at any time enter any field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises within his district, where he has reasonable grounds for supposing that any animal affected with cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, or sheep-pox is to be found, for the purpose of executing this act, but shall, if required, state in writing the grounds on which he has so entered.

If any person refuses admission to such inspector or officer acting under this section, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act.

33. Evidence of disease.—The certificate of an inspector of a local authority to the effect that an animal within his district is affected with cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, or sheep-pox, shall for the purposes of this act be conclusive evidence in all courts of justice and elsewhere of the matter certified.

Infected Places: Cattle Plague and Sheep-pox.

34. Provisional declaration of infected place by inspector.—Where an inspector finds cattle plague or sheep-pox to exist within his district, he shall forthwith make a declaration thereof under his hand, and shall deliver a notice under his hand of such declaration to the occupier of the field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises where the disease is found, and thereupon the same, with all lands and buildings contiguous thereto in the same occupation, shall become and be an infected place, and the same shall continue to be an infected place until the determination and declaration of the local authority relative thereto in this act provided for.

35. Determination and declaration of local authority.—Where an inspector makes such a declaration of the existence of cattle plague or sheep-pox, he shall with all practicable speed send a copy thereof to the Privy Council and deliver the declaration to the local authority, who shall forthwith inquire into the correctness thereof, and if it appear to them that cattle plague or sheep-pox existed as declared by the inspector, they shall so determine and declare, and shall prescribe the limits of the infected place; but if it appears to them that cattle plague or sheep-pox did not exist as declared by the inspector, and the same is certified to them in writing by one or more duly qualified veterinary surgeon or surgeons employed by them in that behalf, they shall so determine and declare, and thereupon the place comprised in the inspector's declaration, or affected thereby, shall cease to be an infected place.

36. Declaration of infected place by local authority or Privy Council.—A local authority with respect to any place within their district, and the Privy Council with respect to any place in Great Britain, may from time to time by order declare any field, stable, cowshed, or other premises in which cattle plague or sheep-pox exists at the date of the order or has existed within seven days before that date, with or without a further area, to be from and after a time specified in the order an infected place.

37. Extent of area on declaration of local authority.—The area of an infected place may in all cases of a declaration by a local authority include, with the field, stable, cowshed, or other premises in which cattle plague or sheep-pox has been found to exist, all lands and buildings lying contiguous thereto, being in the same occupation, and within the district of the local authority, and also (except in the metropolis) an area comprised within one mile from the boundaries of those lands in every direction, but no more.

38. Extension of area into district of other authority.—A local authority may include in the area of an infected place, any adjoining part of the district of another local authority, with the previous consent of that authority in writing signed by their clerk, but not otherwise.

39. Extent of infected place under declaration by council.—The area of an infected place may in all cases of a declaration by the Privy Council include, with the field, stable, cowshed, or other premises in which cattle plague or sheep-pox has been found to exist, such an area as to the Privy Council seem requisite.

40. Area of infected places in metropolis.—With respect to the metropolis the Privy Council may from time to time by order extend the limits of an infected place beyond the boundaries of the field, stable, cowshed, farm, or premises where cattle plague or sheep-pox is declared or found to exist.

41. Description of infected place.—The area of an infected place may in any case be described by reference to a map deposited at some specified place, or by reference to townships, parishes, farms, or otherwise.

42. Notice of declaration.—An order of a local authority, declaring a place to be an infected place shall be published by the local authority by notices posted in and near the infected place, and in such other manner (if any) as they think expedient.

An order of the Privy Council declaring a place to be an infected place shall be published in like manner by and at the expense of any local authority to whom the same is sent by the Privy Council for publication.

Any want of or defect or irregularity in publication shall not invalidate any order.

43. Order evidence of disease.—An order of a local authority or of the Privy Council declaring a place to be an infected place shall be conclusive evidence in all courts of justice and elsewhere of the existence of disease and other matters on which the order proceeds.

44. Rules in schedule.—The rules set forth in the sixth schedule to this act shall have effect with respect to infected places (which rules are in this act referred to as the rules of this act with respect to infected places.)

45. Offences as to infected places.—If any animal, hide, skin, wool, horn, hoof, offal, carcase, meat, dung, hay, straw, litter, or other thing is moved in contravention of the rules of this act with respect to infected places, every person moving the same, or causing the same to be moved, shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act.

46. Exceptions for railways.—The rules of this act with respect to infected places shall not restrict the moving of any animal or thing by railway through an infected place, such animal or thing not being stopped within the infected place.

47. Power to Privy Council to make rules as to infected places.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order make rules with respect to infected places not being inconsistent with the rules set forth in the 6th schedule to this act; and with respect to the metropolis, the Privy Council may also from time to time, if they think it expedient, vary the rules set forth in that schedule; and all rules and variations of rules so made shall be deemed rules of this act with respect to infected places.

48. Duties of local authorities, &c.—Every local authority and the police of every county, borough, town, and place shall, within their respective districts, enforce and execute the provisions of this act, and of any order of the local authority or Privy Council thereunder relative to infected places, and do or cause to be done all things from time to time necessary or expedient for securing, as far as may be, the effectual isolation of infected places in respect of the movement of animals and things.

49. Authority of constable.—Any constable may proceed as follows:—

- (1.) He may apprehend any person found committing an offence against the rules of this act, with respect to infected places, and he shall take any person so apprehended, as soon as conveniently may be, before a justice of the peace to be examined and dealt with according to law; and a person so apprehended shall not be detained in custody by any constable without the order of a justice longer than is necessary for bringing him before a justice, or than twenty-four hours at longest;
- (2.) He may require that any animal or thing moved out of an infected place in contravention of those rules be forthwith taken back within the limits of that place, and may enforce and execute such requisition.

50. Discontinuance of declaration of infected places.—The local authority by whom an infected place is declared may, at any time after the expiration of twenty-eight days from the disappearance of cattle plague or sheep-pox (as the case may be) in that place, by order declare the place to be free from cattle plague or sheep-pox (as the case may be).

The Privy Council may at any time by order declare any place to be free from cattle plague or sheep-pox.

Thereupon, as from the time specified in this behalf in the order of the local authority or Privy Council, the place shall cease to be an infected place as regards cattle plague or sheep-pox (as the case may be).

51. Report to Privy Council.—The clerk of a local authority declaring a place to be an infected place, or declaring a place to be free from cattle plague or sheep-pox, shall forthwith report by post to the Privy Council the fact of such declaration having been made.

52. Effect of orders of council.—An order of the Privy Council relative to an infected place shall supersede any order of a local authority inconsistent with it.

53. Restriction on movement, &c., near infected places.—Where, under this act, an inspector makes a declaration which constitutes a place an infected place, he may also, if the circumstances of the case appear to him so to require, deliver a notice under his hand of such declaration to the occupiers of all lands and buildings adjoining thereto, any part whereof respectively lies within one mile of the boundaries of the infected place in any direction, and thereupon the rules of this act with respect to infected places shall, until the determination and declaration of the local authority relative thereto in this act provided for, apply and have effect to and in respect of those lands and buildings as if the same were actually within the limits of the infected place.

Pleuro-pneumonia.

54. Provisional declaration as to pleuro-pneumonia by inspector.—Where an inspector finds pleuro-pneumonia to exist within his district, he shall forthwith make a declaration thereof under his hand, and shall deliver a notice under his hand of such declaration to the occupier of the field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises where the disease is found; and thereupon the rules set forth in the seventh schedule to this act (in this act called the pleuro-pneumonia rules of this act) shall have effect in relation to such field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises until the determination and declaration of the local authority relative thereto in this act provided for.

Cap 70.

55. Determination and declaration by local authority as to pleuro-pneumonia.—Where an inspector makes a declaration of the existence of pleuro-pneumonia, he shall with all practicable speed send a copy thereof to the Privy Council, and deliver the declaration to the local authority, who shall inquire into the correctness thereof; and if it appears to them that pleuro-pneumonia existed as declared by the inspector, they shall so determine and declare, and thereupon the pleuro-pneumonia rules of this act shall continue to apply to the field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises to which the declaration relates; but if in any such case it appears to the local authority that pleuro-pneumonia did not exist as declared by the inspector, or that a fresh case of pleuro-pneumonia has not occurred for thirty days in such field, stable, cow-shed, or other premises, then the local authority shall so determine and declare, and the pleuro-pneumonia rules of this Act shall cease to operate in relation thereto.

Miscellaneous.

56. Form in schedule.—The forms given in the eighth schedule to this act, with such variations as circumstances require, may be used by an inspector for the purposes of this part of this Act, and a declaration of disease under this part of this act shall not be deemed a certificate of the inspector for any purpose of this act.

57. Exposure for sale, transport by railway, &c., of deceased animals.—If an person exposes in a market or fair or other public place where horses or animals are commonly exposed for sale, or exposes for sale in any sale-yard, whether public or private, or places in a lair or other place adjacent to or connected with a market or fair, or where horses or animals are commonly placed before exposure for sale, or sends or causes to be carried on a railway, or on a canal, river, or other inland navigation, or on a coasting vessel, or carries, leads, or drives, or causes to be carried, led, or driven on a highway or thoroughfare, any horse or animal affected with a contagious or infectious disease, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did not know of the same being so affected, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge.

Where any horse or animal so affected is exposed or otherwise dealt with in contravention of this section, an inspector of the local authority or any officer of the local authority authorised to act in execution of this act may seize the same, and cause it, if affected with glanders, cattle plague, or sheep-pox, to be slaughtered, and if affected with any other contagious or infectious disease to be removed to some convenient and isolated place, and to be there kept for such time as the local authority think expedient; and the local authority may recover the expenses of the execution by them of this section from the owner of the horse or animal, or from the consignor or consignee thereof, who may recover the same from the owner.

In case of a conviction for an offence under this section no compensation shall be payable in respect of any animal slaughtered under this section.

Notwithstanding anything in this section, the Privy Council may from time to time, by order, make such further or other provision as they think expedient respecting animals becoming affected with foot-and mouth disease, or any other contagious or infectious disease not being cattle plague, pleuro-pneumonia, sheep-pox, or glanders, while exposed or placed or being carried, led, or driven as aforesaid, and any such order shall be deemed part of this section.

58. Turning out of diseased animals on unclosed lands, &c.—If any person places or keeps on any common or unclosed land or in any field or other place insufficiently fenced, or on the side of a highway, any horse or animal affected with a contagious or infectious disease, he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did not know of the same being so affected, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge.

59. Trespass on land.—Where a person having cattle in his possession or keeping within the district of a local authority wherein cattle plague exists affixes at the entrance to a building or inclosed place in or on which such cattle are kept a notice forbidding persons to enter into or on that building or place without his permission, then, if any person not having a right of entry or way into, on, or over that building or place, enters into, on, or over the same or any part thereof, in contravention of the notice, he shall for every such offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds.

60. Burial of diseased animals.—Every local authority shall cause every horse or animal that has died of glanders, cattle plague, or sheep pox, or has been slaughtered in consequence of being affected with glanders, cattle plague, or sheep pox, within their district, to be buried as soon as possible in its skin in some proper place, and to be covered with a sufficient quantity of quicklime or other disinfectant, and with not less than six feet of earth, or to be destroyed under inspection of the local authority in such mode as the Privy Council from time to time by order direct or approve.

It shall not be lawful for any person, except with the licence of the Privy Council, to dig up or cause to be dug up the carcase or any part of the carcase of any horse or animal so buried.

61. Purification of sheds, &c., of diseased animals.—A local authority shall cause the yard, shed, stable, field, or other pre-misers in which any horse or animal affected with glanders or cattle plague or sheep pox has been kept while so affected, or has died or been slaughtered, to be thoroughly cleansed and disinfected, and all hay, straw, litter, dung, or other article that has been in contact with or used about any such horse or animal to be burnt or otherwise destroyed.

No fresh animal shall be admitted into any yard, shed, stable, field, or other premises in which any animal affected with cattle plague or sheep pox has been kept while so affected, or has died or been slaughtered, until the expiration of thirty days after the cleansing and disinfecting of such premises in pursuance of this act.

Any such hay, straw, litter, dung, or other article shall not be removed from the premises in which any horse or animal affected with glanders or cattle plague has been, except for the purpose of being destroyed and with a licence of an inspector specifying the place at which it is to be destroyed, nor shall it be removed out of the district of the local authority without the consent in writing of the local authority into whose district it is moved. If any such thing is removed in contravention of this act, the occupier of the premises from which it is removed and the person removing it shall each be deemed guilty of an offence against this act.

A local authority shall direct the disinfecting of the clothes of and the use of due precautions against the spreading of contagion by inspectors and others in contact with animals affected with cattle plague.

62. Steamboat and railway companies, &c., to disinfect carriages, boats, &c.—Every steamboat, railway, and other company, and every person carrying animals for hire to or in Great Britain, shall thoroughly cleanse and disinfect, in such manner as the Privy Council from time to time by order direct, all steamers, vessels, boats, pens, carriages, trucks, horse boxes, and vehicles used by such company or person for the carrying of animals.

If any company or person on any occasion fails to comply with the requisitions of any such order, such company or person shall on every such occasion be deemed guilty of an offence against this act.

An inspector of a local authority, or any officer of a local authority authorised to execute this act, may at all times enter on board any steamer, vessel, or boat in respect whereof he has reasonable grounds for supposing that any company or person has failed to comply with the requisitions of any such order, and on premises where he has reasonable grounds for supposing that any pen, carriage, truck, horse box, or vehicle in respect whereof any company or person has on any occasion so failed is to be found; and if any company or person refuses admission to an inspector or other officer acting under this section, such company or person shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act.

63. Regulations for disinfecting.—The Privy Council may from time to time by order give directions respecting modes of disinfecting, and anything disinfected in accordance with the provisions of such order, or in accordance with any process of disinfection approved by the Privy Council, shall be deemed disinfected within this act, but not otherwise.

64. Water and food to be provided at railways to satisfaction of Privy Council.—Every railway company shall make a provision, to the satisfaction of the Privy Council, of water and food, or either of them, at such stations as the Privy Council from time to time, by general or specific description, direct, for animals carried or about to be or having been carried on the railway of the company; and such water and food, or either of them, shall be supplied to any such animal by the company carrying it on the request in writing of the consignor thereof, or on the request of any person in charge thereof, and the company so supplying water and food, or either of them, may make in respect thereof such reasonable charges, if any, as the Privy Council by order approve, in addition to such charges as they are for the time being authorised to make in respect of the carriage of animals; and the amount of such additional charges accrued due in respect of any animal shall be a debt from the consignor and from the consignee thereof to the company, and shall be recoverable by the company from either of them by proceedings in any court of competent jurisdiction, and the company shall have a lien for the amount thereof on the animal in respect of which the same accrued due, and on any other animal at any time consigned by the same person to be carried by the company.

If any company on any occasion fails to comply with the requirements of this section, they shall, on every such occasion, be deemed guilty of an offence against this act. If in the case of any animal such a request as aforesaid is not made so that the animal remains without a supply of water for thirty consecutive hours, or other period not being less than twelve hours as the Privy Council from time to time by order prescribe, the consignor and the person in charge of the animal shall each be deemed guilty of an offence against this act; and it shall lie on the person accused to prove the time within which the animal has had a supply of water.

PART V.

Slaughter in Cattle Plague: Compensation.

65. Slaughter in cattle plague.—Every local authority shall cause all animals affected with cattle plague within their district to be slaughtered.

66. Slaughter of cattle herded with diseased animals.—A local authority may, if they think fit, cause to be slaughtered any animal that has been in the same shed or stable, or in the same herd or flock, or in contact with any animal affected with cattle plague within their district.

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

67. Slaughter of animals to ascertain disease.—Where an animal is affected with disease suspected to be cattle plague, the local authority may cause the animal to be slaughtered in order to ascertain the nature of the disease.

68. Compensation to owners of animals on slaughter.—Where an animal affected with cattle plague, or affected with disease suspected to be cattle plague, is slaughtered in pursuance of this act, the local authority (except as otherwise provided in this act) shall, by way of compensation for the animal, pay to the owner thereof such sum, not exceeding twenty pounds and not exceeding one half of the value of the animal immediately before it was affected with cattle plague, as to the local authority seems fit.

69. Compensation for slaughter of cattle herded with diseased animals.—Where a local authority causes an animal to be slaughtered on account of its having been in the same shed or stable, or in the same herd or flock, or in contact with an animal affected with cattle plague, the owner of the animal so slaughtered may either dispose of the carcass on his own account, with a licence from some officer appointed in that behalf by the local authority, or may require the local authority to dispose of the same, in which latter case the local authority shall pay to the owner thereof, by way of compensation, such sum, not exceeding thirty pounds, as may equal three fourths of the value of the animal slaughtered.

70. Power to ascertain value of slaughtered animals.—A local authority may require the value of any animal slaughtered under this Act to be ascertained by officers of the local authority or by arbitration, and generally may impose conditions as to evidence of the slaughter and value of the animals slaughtered.

71. Restrictions on compensations.—A local authority may, if they think fit, withhold compensation in respect of any animal slaughtered, where the owner or the person having the charge thereof has in their judgment been guilty, in relation to such animal, of any act in contravention of this act, or of any order, regulation, or licence of the Privy Council or of a local authority, or has, in relation to such animal, failed to comply with the provisions of this act, or of any such order, regulation, or licence in respect of the giving of notice of disease or in any other respect, and may, if they think fit, withhold compensation in respect of a foreign animal slaughtered on account of its being affected with cattle plague, or with disease suspected to be cattle plague, if it appears to them that the animal was so affected at the time of the landing thereof.

72. Amount of insurance to be recovered.—Where an animal has been slaughtered in pursuance of this act, the owner thereof shall not be entitled to recover in respect of the insurance thereof any sum which, together with the payment which he receives for the same under this act, would exceed the sum which he would have been entitled to receive in respect of the insurance.

73. Reservation for experimental treatment.—The Privy Council may, notwithstanding anything in this act, reserve for experimental treatment any animal ordered to be slaughtered under this act, but compensation shall be payable in respect thereof as if this section had not been enacted.

74. Record respecting slaughter.—Every local authority shall keep, in such manner and form as the Privy Council from time to time by order direct or approve, a record relative to proceedings under this part of this act, stating the date of any order for slaughter, and the execution of the order, or the reservation of the animal for experimental treatment (as the case may be), and other proper particulars; and such record shall be evidence if any question arises concerning an order for the slaughter of any animal, or concerning compensation in respect thereof.

PART VI.

Orders of Council and Local Authorities.

75. Power for Privy Council to make orders.—The Privy Council may from time to time make such orders as they think expedient for all or any of the following purposes:

For insuring for animals brought by sea to ports in Great Britain a proper supply of food and water during the passage and on landing:

For protecting such animals from unnecessary suffering during the passage and on landing:

For protecting animals from unnecessary suffering during inland transit:

For prohibiting or regulating the movement of animals, and the removal of dead animals or parts thereof, and of hay, straw, litter, dung, and other things likely to spread contagious or infectious diseases among animals:

For requiring the cleansing and disinfecting of yards, sheds, stables, fields, and other premises:

For regulating the disposal of animals dying while affected with a contagious or infectious disease:

For requiring notice of the appearance of any such disease among animals:

For prohibiting or regulating the holding of markets, fairs, exhibitions, or sales of animals:

And generally any orders whatsoever which they think it expedient to make for the better execution of this act, or for the purpose of in any manner preventing the introduction or spreading of contagious or infectious disease among animals in Great Britain (whether any such orders are of the same kind as the kinds enumerated in this section or not), and may in any such order direct or authorise the slaughtering of animals that are affected with any contagious or infectious disease or that have been in contact with animals so affected; and may in any such order direct or authorise the local authority to pay compensation for any animals so slaughtered; and may in any such order impose penalties for offences against the same, not exceeding the sum of twenty pounds for any such offence, and so that in every such order provision be made that a penalty less than the maximum may be ordered to be paid; and this section shall extend to horses and all ruminating animals not within the definition of animals in this act.

Every such order shall have the like force and effect as if it had been enacted by this act.

76. Privy Council Inspectors.—A person for the time being appointed by the Privy Council an inspector for the purposes of this act shall have for and throughout Great Britain all such powers, authorities, and privileges as an inspector of a local authority has within or in relation to his district, and a direction of the Privy Council shall in the case of an inspector appointed by them be deemed equivalent to a direction of a local authority in the case of an inspector appointed by them.

77. Provisions for towns, &c.—The Privy Council may from time to time, by order, declare that such of the provisions of this act, and of any order of the Privy Council under it, as relate to the metropolis, or any of those provisions, shall also extend and apply to any town, city, parish, or place specified in the order, and the same shall extend to such town, city, parish, or place accordingly; and the Privy Council may at any time revoke or from time to time vary any such order.

78. Regulation, &c. of landing of hay, &c.—The Privy Council may from time to time, by order, make such regulations as they think expedient for prohibiting or regulating the landing of any hay, straw, fodder, or other article brought from any place out of the United Kingdom, whereby it appears to the Privy Council contagion or infection may be conveyed to animals, or for causing the same to be destroyed if landed.

If any person lands or attempts to land any hay, straw, fodder, or other article in contravention of any such order, the same shall be forfeited in like manner as goods the importation whereof is prohibited by the acts relating to the customs are liable to be forfeited, and the person so offending shall be liable to such penalties as are imposed on persons importing or attempting to import goods the importation whereof is prohibited by the acts relating to the customs, without prejudice to any proceeding against him under this act or any such order, but so that no person be punished twice for the same offence.

79. Directions of Council and local authority.—The Privy Council may require a local authority to carry into effect any order of the Privy Council under this act, and may authorise a local authority to make any regulations for the purpose of preventing the spreading of contagious or infectious diseases among animals, subject to such conditions as the Privy Council impose, and the local authority may by any such regulation impose such penalties as the Privy Council are by this act authorised to impose by order.

80. Expenses of execution of orders.—The expenses incurred by a local authority in executing any order of the Privy Council under this act shall be defrayed by the local authority out of such local rates or funds as such order directs, and subject to or in the absence of any such direction shall be deemed expenses incurred by the local authority in pursuance of this act.

81. Publication of orders, &c.—Every order of the Privy Council under this act shall be published in the London Gazette, save that where an order of the Privy Council affects only a particular port, town, or place, or part thereof, specified in the order, or declares a place to be an infected place, or to be free from cattle plague or from sheep-pox, or is in the nature of a licence under an order of Council, or of a revocation of such a licence, then the insertion in the London Gazette of a notice of the issuing thereof shall be for all purposes sufficient publication thereof.

Any order of the Privy Council under this act shall be published, by and at the expense of any local authority to whom the same is sent by the Privy Council for publication, in some newspaper circulating in the district of the local authority, or in such other manner as the Privy Council direct.

Any order or regulation made by a local authority shall be published by them at their own expense in such manner as the Privy Council direct, and, subject to or in the absence of, any such direction, in such manner as the local authority think sufficient and proper to ensure publicity.

82. Instrument may be in print, &c.—Any order, licence, regulation, or other instrument made under this act, or under any order of the Privy Council thereunder, may be in writing or print, or partly in writing and partly in print.

83. Stamp duty and fees not to be paid.—No stamp duty shall be payable on, and no fee or other charge shall be demanded or made for, any appointment, certificate, declaration, or licence under this act, or any order or regulation made thereunder.

84. Evidence of orders.—An order or regulation made or issued by a local authority under this act, or under any order of the Privy Council, may be proved as follows:—

By the production of a copy of a newspaper containing a copy of such order or regulation; or

By the production of a printed copy of such order or regulation, purporting to be certified to be a true copy by the clerk of the peace where the authority are justices in general or quarter sessions assembled, or by the town clerk or other officer performing the duties of a town clerk in the case of an authority having a town clerk or other officer as aforesaid, or by such other officer as the Privy Council prescribe;

And any such order or regulation shall, until the contrary is proved, be deemed to have been duly made and issued at the time at which it bears date.

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

85. Recovery of penalties.—Penalties and forfeitures shall be recoverable and applicable under an order of the Privy Council, or an order or regulation of a local authority, as penalties and forfeitures under this act are recoverable and applicable.

PART VII.

Lands.

86. Acquisition of land by local authority.—A local authority may purchase or take on lease or at a rent land for the purpose of burying therein animals dying or slaughtered on account of any contagious or infectious disease, or for the purpose of providing wharves, lairs, sheds, markets, houses, and places for the landing, reception, sale, and slaughter of foreign animals, or for any other purpose of this act, and may sell, exchange, or dispose of lands required by them under this act, but not required to be retained for the purposes thereof, carrying the money produced thereby to the credit of the local rate.

87. Conveyances, &c., of land.—Land purchased or taken on lease or at a rent under this act by a local authority, not being a body corporate, shall be assured or demised to the local authority and their successors, in trust for the purposes of this act, and shall be accepted, taken, and held by them as a body corporate.

88. Purchase under provisional order.—The regulations contained in section seventy-five of The Local Government Act 1858, shall be observed with respect to the purchase of land by a local authority for the purposes of this act, and shall apply and have effect as if the local authority were a local board acting under the Local Government Act, and the purposes of this act were purposes of that act, save that the advertisements and notices requisite under that section may be published and served in any two consecutive months instead of only in the months therein specified, and that the local rate be substituted for the rates therein mentioned; and the powers conferred by this section may be exercised by a local authority with respect to land either within or without their district.

PART VIII.

Expenses of Local Authorities.

89. Expenses for compensation.—The expenditure of a local authority in compensation for animals slaughtered under Part V. of this Act, or in respect of principal of or interest on money borrowed in pursuance of this act, shall be defrayed out of the local rate, or out of a separate rate to be levied in all respects as the local rate, and included under the term local rate.

Any person who is not the owner of the premises in respect of which he is rated under this section to the local rate may deduct from the growing rent due to the owner of such premises one half of the rate payable by him for the purposes of this section, and every owner shall allow such deduction accordingly.

The owner for the purposes of this section shall be the person for the time being entitled to receive the rackrent of the premises in respect of which the rate is made on his own account, or who would be entitled to receive the same if such premises were let at a rackrent, including under the term rackrent any rent which is not less than two thirds of the net annual value of the premises out of which the rent issues.

Every local authority shall have power, notwithstanding any limit in any Act of Parliament, to levy a local rate to the amount required for the purposes of this act, but every rate or increase of rate levied under this section shall in all precepts for the levy thereof be described as a separate rate or separate item of rate, and when collected from the individual ratepayers shall be collected as a separate rate or specified as a separate item of rate.

Every order of a board of guardians for contribution of moneys out of which any such expenditure as in this section mentioned is payable, shall state the amount in the pound of contribution required for such expenditure; and the overseers, on the receipt given to any ratepayer for poor rate, shall specify the amount (if any) collected in respect of such expenditure.

90. General expenses.—Expenses incurred by a local authority in pursuance of this act, other than their expenditure in compensation for animals slaughtered under Part V. of this act, or in respect of principal of or interest on money borrowed in pursuance of this act, shall be defrayed out of the local rate.

91. Remission of rate in certain cases.—Where before the twentieth day of February one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six any person suffered so great a loss of cattle by cattle plague as to entitle him, after the passing of this act, in the opinion of the local authority, to a remission in whole or in part of the amount due from him in respect of the local rate, such remission may be granted by the local authority.

92. Application of balance unappropriated.—Where at the passing of this act a local authority have in their hands an unappropriated balance of a local rate levied under any act repealed by this act, they may, if they think fit, apply any part of such balance in compensation for cattle slaughtered between the passing of "The Cattle Diseases Prevention Act, 1866," and the appointment of inspectors under that act, by direction of a person whom the owner of such cattle had reasonable ground to believe to be the authorised inspector for the execution of the act; or they may carry such balance or any part thereof to the credit of the ordinary account of the local rate, to be applied for any of the purposes for which the local rate when levied under any act other than an act repealed by this act is applicable.

93. Variation of forms of precepts and orders.—All precepts, orders for contribution, and forms of poor rate shall, wher necessary, be varied in such manner as may be required for carrying into effect this act.

94. Advance of moneys by treasurer of local authority.—The treasurer of a local authority may, if directed by them, advance out of any moneys for the time being in his hands any sums required for payment of expenses incurred by them in pursuance of this act.

95. Saving of statutes applicable to rates leviable for expenses.—Where the local rate is a county rate or borough rate, or any other such rate as is mentioned in the second schedule to this act, all the provisions of the statutes applicable to the making, levying, and collecting of a county rate, borough rate, or such other rate shall apply, notwithstanding that the whole of such rate, or any part thereof, is applicable to the payment of the expenditure of a local authority in pursuance of this act in compensation for animals slaughtered, or in respect of principal or of interest on money borrowed in pursuance of this act.

96. Error in statement not to vitiate precept, &c.—An error in the statement of the amount of expenses in any precept, warrant, contribution, order, or receipt issued or given under this act shall not invalidate such precept, warrant, contribution, order, or receipt; but any person aggrieved by the error may appeal to the justices in petty sessions, and the justices may rectify the error, and award to the appellant compensation for any loss he may have sustained thereby, the amount of such compensation to be paid to the appellant, and to be deemed expenses of the local authority under this act.

97. Recouping of charges on boroughs out of county rates.—Notwithstanding anything in this act, the local authority of each borough situate within a county and assessed to the county rate thereof shall be recouped the proportionate amount contributed by the borough to the expenses incurred by the local authority of the county in pursuance of this act (including expenditure in compensation for animals slaughtered, or in respect of principal or of interest on money borrowed in pursuance of this act), so that the burden of those expenses shall be borne wholly by the county, and not as to any part thereof by any borough situate within the county.

Borrowing.

98. Mortgage of rates in certain cases.—Where the rate levied or required for the purposes of this act exceeds or would exceed sixpence in the pound, a local authority may, for the purposes of defraying any costs, charges, and expenses under this act, borrow at interest on the credit of the local rate any sums of money necessary for defraying such costs, charges, and expenses; and for the purpose of securing the repayment of any sums of money so borrowed, together with such interest as aforesaid, the local authority may mortgage the local rate for any period not exceeding seven years.

Where the rate levied or required for the purposes of this act, exceeds or would exceed ninepence in the pound, the commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may, on application from the local authority, extend the term to any term not exceeding fourteen years, and the local authority may mortgage the rate accordingly.

Provided that where the local authority borrow for any purpose of this act on any security other than the local rate (whether together with the local rate, if any, or separately therefrom) the limitations in this section contained respecting the amount of rate and the term of years shall not operate.

The provisions of the Commissioners' Clauses Act 1847, with respect to the mortgages to be executed by the commissioners, shall be incorporated with this section, the local authority being deemed to be the commissioners, and any mortgagee or assignee may enforce payment of his principal and interest by appointment of a receiver.

The Public Works Loan Commissioners may, with the approval of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, advance to a local authority, on the security of the local rate, without any further security, any sums of money to be applied for the purposes of this act, and to be repaid, with interest, within any period as aforesaid.

99. Further power where expenses exceed one shilling in pound.—Where the estimated amount of the sum required to be levied for payment of the expenditure of a local authority in pursuance of this act (including expenditure incurred in the payment of money borrowed or of interest thereon) exceeds the sum that would be raised by the levying of a rate of one shilling in the pound on the rateable value of the property assessed to the local rate, the local authority may borrow from the Public Works Loan Commissioners, and the Public Works Loan Commissioners may, out of the balance for the time being unapplied of any money by any act already passed authorised to be issued for the purposes of loans under any act repealed by this act, or out of any other money for the time being authorised to be issued for the purpose of loans under this section, lend to them such sums as may be required, subject to the following conditions:

1. Every such loan shall be made with the sanction of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury;
2. Interest shall be at the rate of three and a quarter per centum per annum;
3. Repayment of the loan shall be made by such number of equal annual instalments, not exceeding thirty, as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury direct;
4. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may, if they think fit, authorise the postponement, for a period not exceeding two years, of any payment of principal or interest becoming due within the first three years:

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

5. Repayment of the loan and interest shall be secured by a mortgage of the local rate, and it shall not be incumbent on the Public Works Loan Commissioners to require any other security;

6. The local authority shall have power to levy and shall levy rates requisite for the purpose of repaying the loan with interest;

7. The sanction of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury to the loan shall be conclusive evidence that it is authorised by this act; and no objection shall be made by any ratepayer to the validity of any mortgage for the loan, or to the application of the proceeds of the local rate to the payment of the principal or interest of the loan;

8. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may, by agreement with the local authority borrowing, commute into an equivalent annuity terminable at the time fixed for the liquidation of the annual instalments aforesaid, the payments secured by the mortgage or any portion of such payments.

100. Provision for existing loans.—Where a local authority have borrowed money on the security of a mortgage of the local rate, under any act repealed by this act, then (except as otherwise provided in this act with respect to the county of Chester), notwithstanding any repeal in this act, or any alteration made by this act in the definition of a local authority or local rate, or any other thing in this act contained, the local rate mortgaged shall continue to be the security for the money borrowed, as if this act had not been passed; and in relation to the money so borrowed, the local authority which borrowed such money, and the local rate on which the same is charged, shall continue to be the local authority and the local rate under the acts repealed by this act, as if this act had not been passed; and all provisions of Part II. of "The Cattle Diseases Prevention Act 1866," relative to expenses, and all the provisions of "The Cattle Diseases Prevention Amendment Act 1866," and all other provisions of any act repealed by this act relative to expenses of local authorities, rating, remission of rates, and borrowing, and matters connected therewith respectively, shall, in relation to the money so borrowed, and to the rate charged therewith, continue to operate as if this act had not been passed.

101. Provisions for Cheshire as to repayment of existing loan, &c.—With respect to the county of Chester the following provisions shall have effect:

- (1.) As far as regards the expenditure of the local authority of the county of Chester in respect of principal or of interest on money borrowed in pursuance of any act repealed by this act, and any matter consequent on or relative to that expenditure (including the remission of rates), the foregoing provisions of this part of this act shall not apply to that county;
- (2.) That expenditure shall be defrayed out of the county rate for the county of Chester, or out of any money applicable under any Act of Parliament or otherwise for the public charges or uses of that county, or partly out of one and partly out of the other; such county rate to be assessed, levied, and collected in the manner prescribed by law for the assessment, levying, and collection of county rates, independently of this act or of any act repealed by this act;
- (3.) In lieu of any provision authorising deduction by tenant from landlord of half of the local rate, any person who is not the owner of the premises in the county of Chester in respect of which he is rated to the poor-rate may, in each year until the first day of November one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six, in which he duly pays his poor-rate, deduct from the growing rent due to the owner of such premises a sum equal to one penny in the pound on the annual rateable value of such premises, and every owner shall allow such deduction accordingly; and the owner, for the purposes of this section, shall be the person defined as such in this part of this act;
- (4.) The local authority for the county of Chester shall entertain and decide on applications from ratepayers to whom, if this section had not been inserted in this act, remission in respect of the local rate might have been granted, and may on such applications grant to the applicants, or any of them, such sum or sums of money (if any) out of the county rate as the local authority think reasonable, regard being had to the extent of loss in the cases of the several applicants;
- (5.) The local authority of each borough situate within the county of Chester, and assessed to the county rate thereof, shall, by means of repayment out of the county rate, or by means of differential rates, or partly in the one way and partly in the other, be recouped the proportionate amount contributed by the borough to any money granted as aforesaid, so that the burden of the expenditure incurred by the local authority of the county in respect of such grants shall be borne wholly by the county, and not as to any part thereof by any borough situate within the county;

but nothing in this section shall prejudicially affect the mortgage security of the Public Works Loan Commissioners for money advanced to the local authority of the county of Chester under any act repealed by this act; and the local authority of that county shall from time to time levy such rates as are under this section applicable, and as are for the time being requisite (either wholly or in conjunction with such other money as in this section mentioned), for the purpose of repaying with interest the money advanced on such mortgage security according to the terms thereof.

102. Validity of rates under Act.—The existence of any order or precept for the making or collection under any act repealed by this act of any rate remaining uncollected wholly or in part at the passing of this act shall not affect the validity of any rate made after the passing of this act.

PART IX.

Offences and Legal Proceedings.

103. Penalty for disobedience to Act or order.—If any person acts in contravention of or is guilty of any offence against this act, or any order or regulation made by the Privy Council or a local authority in pursuance of this act, he shall for every such offence (except as otherwise provided in this act, and except where a less penalty is provided in any such order or regulation), be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds.

Where any such offence is committed with respect to more than four animals a penalty not exceeding five pounds for each animal may be imposed instead of the penalty of twenty pounds.

Where any such offence is committed in relation to offal, dung, hay, straw, litter, or other thing, a further penalty not exceeding ten pounds may be imposed in respect of every half ton in weight of such offal or other thing after the first half ton.

104. Penalties on use of expired licences, &c.—If any person does any of the following things he shall be deemed guilty of an offence against this act:

- (1) If he does anything for which a licence is requisite under this act, or any order of the Privy Council thereunder, without having obtained a licence:
- (2) If where such a licence is requisite, having obtained a licence in that behalf, he does the thing licensed after the licence has expired:
- (3) If he uses or offers or attempts to use as such a licence an instrument not being a complete licence, or an instrument untruly purporting or appearing to be a licence, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did not know of such incompleteness or untruth, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge:
- (4) If, with intent to evade any provision of this act or of any order of the Privy Council thereunder, he fabricates or alters, or offers or utters, knowing the same to be fabricated or altered, any licence, declaration, certificate, or instrument made or issued or purporting to be made or issued under or for any purpose of this act or any such order:
- (5) If, for the purpose of obtaining any licence, certificate, or instrument under or for the purposes of any such provision, he makes a declaration false in any material particular, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did not know of such falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge:
- (6) If he obtains or endeavours to obtain any such licence, certificate, or instrument by means of any false pretence, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did not know of such falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge:
- (7) If he grants or issues any such licence, certificate, or instrument, being false in any material particular, unless he shows to the satisfaction of the justices before whom he is charged that he did know of such falsity, and that he could not with reasonable diligence have obtained such knowledge:

And in any such case he shall be liable, on conviction, in the discretion of the justices, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour, in lieu of the pecuniary penalty to which he is liable under this act.

105. Punishment for obstructing inspectors, &c.—If any person obstructs or impedes an inspector or other officer acting in execution of this act or of any order of the Privy Council thereunder, he, and every person aiding and assisting him therein, shall be guilty of an offence against this act, and the inspector or other officer, or any person whom he calls to his assistance, may seize the offender and detain him until he can be conveniently taken before a justice, to be dealt with according to law.

106. Application of penalties.—Notwithstanding anything in any act relating to the metropolitan police, or to municipal corporations, or in any other act, one half of every penalty or forfeiture recovered under this act shall be paid to the person who sues or proceeds for the same, and the other half shall be applied as if this section had not been enacted.

107. Appearance of companies, &c.—In proceedings before justices under this act, any railway company or other body corporate may appear by any member of their board of directors or council, or by any officer authorised in writing under the hand of any director or member of the council of the company or body.

108. Appeal.—If any party feels aggrieved by the dismissal of his complaint by justices, or by any determination or adjudication of justices with respect to any penalty or forfeiture under this act, he may appeal therefrom, subject to the conditions and regulations following:

1. The appeal shall be made to some court of general or quarter sessions for the county or place in which the cause of appeal has arisen, holden not less than fifteen days and not more than four months after the decision of the justices:

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

2. The appellant shall within three days after the cause of appeal has arisen, give notice to the clerk of the petty sessional division for which the justices act whose decision is appealed from of his intention to appeal, and of the grounds thereof:
3. The appellant shall immediately after such notice enter into a recognizance, before a justice of the peace, with two sufficient sureties, conditioned personally to try such appeal, and to abide the judgment of the court thereon, and to pay such costs as may be awarded by the court:
4. The court may adjourn the appeal, and may make such order thereon as they think just:

But nothing in this section respecting appeals shall affect any enactment relative to appeals in cases of summary convictions or adjudications in the city of London or the metropolitan police district.

109. Jurisdiction for trial of offences, &c.—For the purposes of proceedings under this Act, or any order of the Privy Council or order or regulation of a local authority thereunder, every offence against this act or any such order or regulation shall be deemed to have been committed, and every cause of complaint under this act or any such order or regulation shall be deemed to have arisen, either in the place in which the same actually was committed or arose, or in any place in which the person charged or complained against happens to be.

Protection of Persons in execution of Act.

110. Actions against persons executing act not to be brought without notice, &c.—An action or proceeding shall not lie against any person acting or intending to act under the authority or in the execution or in pursuance of this act for any alleged irregularity or trespass or other act or thing done or omitted by him under this act, unless notice in writing (specifying the cause of the action or proceeding, and the name and residence of the intending plaintiff or prosecutor, and of his attorney or agent in the matter), is given by the intending plaintiff or prosecutor to the intended defendant one month at least before the commencement of the action or proceeding, nor unless the action or proceeding is commenced within four months next after the act or thing complained of is done or omitted, or, in case of a continuation of damage, within four months next after the doing of such damage has ceased; and any such action shall be laid and tried in the county or place where the cause of action arose, and not elsewhere.

111. Plea in action.—In any such action the defendant may plead generally that the act or thing complained of was done or omitted by him when acting or intending to act under the authority or in the execution or in pursuance of this act, and may give all special matter in evidence.

112. Evidence in action.—On the trial of any such action the plaintiff shall not be permitted to go into evidence of any cause of action not stated in his notice.

113. Tender of amends, &c.—The plaintiff in any such action shall not succeed if tender of sufficient amends is made by the defendant before the commencement of the action; and in case no tender has been made the defendant may, by leave of the court in which the action is brought, at any time pay into the court such sum of money as he thinks fit, whereupon such proceeding and order shall be had and made in and by the court as may be had and made on the payment of money into court in an ordinary action.

114. Costs of defendant.—If in any such action the plaintiff does not succeed in obtaining judgment, the defendant shall receive such full and reasonable indemnity as to all costs, charges, and expenses incurred in and about the action as may be taxed and allowed by the proper officer, subject to review; and though a verdict is given for the plaintiff in the action, he shall not have costs against the defendant unless the judge before whom the trial is had certifies his approval of the action and verdict.

115. Costs, &c., of defence to actions, &c., under direction of local authority.—Where any such action or proceeding is defended under the direction or with the approval of the local authority, the costs charges, and expenses incurred in and about the same by or on behalf of the defendant and payable by him, and any damage or other money recovered against or payable by him in or in consequence of such action or proceeding, shall be deemed expenses incurred by the local authority in pursuance of this act, and shall be defrayed accordingly.

PART X.

Scotland.

116. Application of Part X to Scotland.—The provisions of this part of this act shall extend to Scotland only, and shall have effect in substitution for the provisions of the preceding parts of this act, when so expressed or implied, and otherwise shall have effect in addition to the provisions thereof.

117. Local authority, &c.—For the purposes of this act the respective districts, authorities, rate, and officers described in that behalf in the ninth schedule to this act shall be the district, the local authority, the local rate, and the clerk of the local authority.

118. Appointment of local authority in counties.—The commissioners of supply in every county shall meet, and nominate not fewer than four or more than fifteen of their number to act on the county board for the purposes of this act, and shall intimate to the lord lieutenant of the county and the convener of the county the number and names of the persons so appointed.

The clerk of supply in each county shall call a meeting of the occupiers of agricultural subjects in such county, valued in the valuation roll in force for the time at one hundred pounds and upwards, and of occupiers of such subjects of which they are owners valued in the valuation roll at fifty pounds and under one hundred pounds; and such meeting shall be called by advertisement in one or more newspapers circulating in the county for the same day as, or for a day not later than, eight days after, the meeting of the commissioners of supply; and such advertisement shall specify the time and place of such meeting, and the clerk of supply shall be clerk to such meeting; and the meeting shall nominate from among such occupiers and owners and occupiers a number of persons equal to those nominated by the commissioners of supply, and the meeting shall also name a convener, who shall intimate the names of the persons so nominated to the convener of the county, and shall have power to call similar meetings by such advertisement, when occasion shall require; and in the event of such election not being intimated to the convener of the county within fifteen days from the date of such meeting, it shall be lawful to the lord lieutenant to nominate from among such occupiers, or owners and occupiers, such number of persons, and intimate the same to the convener of the county.

Any such nomination and intimation made for the purposes of any act repealed by this act shall continue to have effect for the purposes of this act.

Vacancies from time to time happening by death, resignation, or otherwise among the members of the local authority shall be filled up by the authority, and in the manner by and in which the members vacating office were respectively nominated.

The persons nominated as in this section provided, and the lord lieutenant of the county, the convener of the county, and the sheriff of the county (or in his absence such one of his substitutes within the county as he directs by writing under his hand), for the time being, shall constitute the local authority; five shall be a quorum of the local authority.

As far as not otherwise provided by this act, such local authority shall have all the powers conferred on the local authority by this act, and shall have power to elect a chairman, specify a quorum, and make all regulations necessary for carrying the purposes of this act into effect.

The chairman of the local authority, and in default of him the convener of the county, and in default of him any three members of the local authority, may at any time call a meeting of the local authority, to be held at such time and place as he or they may fix, and the local authority may adjourn as they from time to time think fit.

119. Purchase under provisional order.—Part VII. of this act shall have effect as if section ninety of "The Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867," were thereby applied, instead of section seventy-five of "The Local Government Act, 1858," and in the said section ninety the local authority and local rate under this act shall be substituted for the local authority and the assessment therein mentioned.

120. Mode of levying and recovering assessments.—The local authority in a county shall from time to time give notice to the commissioners of supply of the sums necessary to be provided under the provisions of this act by means of the local rate; and the amount so intimated shall be assessed and collected by the commissioners of supply according to the real rent of lands and heritages as appearing on the valuation roll in force for the year, who shall pay over the same to the local authority.

The local authority in a burgh shall in like manner assess and collect the amount required to be raised by local rate within such burgh.

All such assessments shall be payable one half by the proprietor and one half by the tenant, but may be collected wholly from the tenant, who shall in that case be entitled to deduct one half thereof from the rent payable by him to the proprietor; or wholly from the proprietor, who shall in that case be entitled to relief against the tenant for one half of the assessment; and for the purposes of the provisions of this act relative to any balance of funds remaining over from any assessment, the words "local rate" shall in Scotland mean the poor rate.

All the provisions in regard to the recovery of assessments in the act of the session of the twentieth and twenty-first years of Her Majesty (chapter seventy-two), "to render more effectual the Police in Counties and Burghs in Scotland," are hereby incorporated in this act as far as the same are not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

121. Certificate of copy for evidence.—In the case of a county, a printed copy of an order or regulation of the local authority, purporting to be certified to be a true copy by the clerk of supply, shall be received in proof.

122. Jurisdiction under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 53.—The terms "justice" and "justices" shall include any magistrate having jurisdiction under "The Summary Procedure Act, 1864."

123. Local authority may apply to procurator fiscal.—In the event of any person refusing or delaying to comply with the order of a local authority, the local authority may give information thereof to the procurator fiscal of the county or burgh who may apply to the sheriff for a warrant to carry such order into effect, and such warrant may be executed by the officers of the court in the usual way.

124. Sheriff to have concurrent jurisdiction.—All judicial powers given to justices and quarter sessions, or to magistrates in boroughs, by this act, may also be exercised by the sheriff of the county or the sheriff substitute.

Cap. 70.

Cap. 70.

125. Notice of appeal.—Notice of appeal and of the grounds thereof shall be given to the clerk of the peace of the county.

126. Burgh of Maxwelltown.—For the purposes of this act the burgh of Maxwelltown shall be held to be a part of the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and not of the parliamentary burgh of Dumfries.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

31 & 32 VICT. CAP. 71.

An Act to consolidate and amend the Law of Bankruptcy.—
[29th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to consolidate and amend the law relating to bankruptcy:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869."

2. Application of Act.—This act shall not, except in so far as is expressly provided, apply to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Commencement of Act.—This act shall not come into operation until the first day of January one thousand eight hundred and seventy, which date is hereinafter referred to as the commencement of this act.

4. Interpretation of certain terms in the Act: "Court;" "Registrar;" "Prescribed;" "Property;" "Debt;" "Person;" "Trader."—In this act, if not inconsistent with the context, the following terms have the meanings hereinafter respectively assigned to them; that is to say,

"The Court" shall mean the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy as by this act provided:

"The registrar" shall mean the registrar of "the court" as above defined;

"Prescribed" shall mean prescribed by rules of court to be made as in this act provided:

"Property" shall mean and include money, goods, things in action, land, and every description of property, whether real or personal; also, obligations, easements, and every description of estate, interest and profit, present or future, vested or contingent, arising out of or incident to property as above defined:

"Debt provable in bankruptcy" shall include any debt or liability by this act made provable in bankruptcy:

"Person" shall include a body corporate:

"Trader" shall, for the purposes of this act, mean the several persons in that behalf mentioned in the first schedule to this act annexed.

5. Exclusion of companies and large partnerships.—A partnership, association, or company corporate, or registered under "The Companies Act, 1862," shall not be adjudged bankrupt under this act.

PART I.

ADJUDICATION AND VESTING OF PROPERTY.

Adjudication.

6. Petition for adjudication in bankruptcy.—A single creditor, or two or more creditors if the debt due to such single creditor, or the aggregate amount of debts due to such several creditors, from any debtor, amount to a sum of not less than fifty pounds, may present a petition to the court, praying that the debtor be adjudged a bankrupt, and alleging as the ground for such adjudication any one or more of the following acts or defaults, hereinafter deemed to be and included under the expression "acts of bankruptcy:"

(1.) That the debtor has, in England or elsewhere, made a conveyance or assignment of his property to a trustee or trustees for the benefit of his creditors generally;

(2.) That the debtor has, in England or elsewhere, made a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of his property or of any part thereof;

(3.) That the debtor has, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, done any of the following things, namely, departed out of England, or being out of England remained out of England; or being a trader departed from his dwelling-house, or otherwise absented himself; or begun to keep house; or suffered himself to be outlawed;

(4.) That the debtor has filed in the prescribed manner in the court a declaration admitting his inability to pay his debts;

(5.) That execution issued against the debtor on any legal process for the purpose of obtaining payment of not less than fifty pounds has in the case of a trader been levied by seizure and sale of his goods;

(6.) That the creditor presenting the petition has served in the prescribed manner on the debtor a debtor's summons requiring the debtor to pay a sum due, of an amount of not less than fifty pounds, and the debtor being a trader has for the space of seven days, or not being a trader has for the space of three weeks, succeeding the service of such summons, neglected to pay such sum, or to secure or compound for the same.

But no person shall be adjudged a bankrupt on any of the above grounds unless the act of bankruptcy on which the adjudication is grounded has occurred within six months before the presentation of the petition for adjudication; moreover, the debt of the petitioning creditor must be a liquidated sum due at law or in equity, and must not be a secured debt, unless the petitioner state in his petition that he will be ready to give up such security for the benefit of the creditors in the event of the debtor being adjudicated a bankrupt, or unless the petitioner is willing to give an estimate of the value of his security, in which latter case he may be admitted as a petitioning creditor to the extent of the balance of the debt due to him after deducting the value so estimated, but he shall, on application being made by the trustee within the prescribed time after the date of adjudication, give up his security to such trustee for the benefit of the creditors upon payment of such estimated value.

Cap. 71.

7. Proceedings in relation to a debtor's summons.—A debtor's summons may be granted by the court on a creditor proving to its satisfaction that a debt sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy is due to him from the person against whom the summons is sought, and that the creditor has failed to obtain payment of his debt, after using reasonable efforts to do so. The summons shall be in the prescribed form, resembling, as nearly as circumstances admit, a writ issued by one of Her Majesty's superior courts. It shall state that in the event of the debtor failing to pay the sum specified in the summons, or to compound for the same to the satisfaction of the creditor, a petition may be presented against him, praying that he may be adjudged a bankrupt. The summons shall have an endorsement thereon to the like effect, or such other prescribed endorsement as may be best calculated to indicate to the debtor the nature of the document served upon him, and the consequences of inattention to the requisitions therein made.

Any debtor served with a debtor's summons may apply to the court, in the prescribed manner and within the prescribed time, to dismiss such summons, on the ground that he is not indebted to the creditor serving such summons, or that he is not indebted to such amount as will justify such creditor in presenting a bankruptcy petition against him; and the court may dismiss the summons, with or without costs, if satisfied with the allegations made by the debtor, or it may, upon such security (if any) being given as the court may require for payment to the creditor of the debt alleged by him to be due, and the costs of establishing such debt, stay all proceedings on the summons for such time as will be required for the trial of the question relating to such debt: Provided that when the summons shall have issued from the London Court of Bankruptcy, such trial shall be had either before such court or before any other court of competent jurisdiction; and when the summons shall have issued from a county court, before such court in all cases in which it has now jurisdiction, and in all other cases before some competent tribunal.

8. Proceedings on petition.—A petition praying that a debtor may be adjudged a bankrupt, in this act referred to as a bankruptcy petition, shall be served in the prescribed manner. At the hearing the court shall require proof of the debt of the petitioning creditor, and of the trading, if necessary, and of the act of bankruptcy, or if more than one act of bankruptcy is alleged in the petition, of some one of the alleged acts of bankruptcy, and, if satisfied with such proof, shall adjudge the debtor to be bankrupt. The court may adjourn the petition, either conditionally or unconditionally, for the procurement of further evidence, or for any other just cause, or may dismiss the petition, with or without costs, as the court thinks just.

9. Proceedings if debt of petitioning creditor is contested.—Where the debtor appears on the petition, and denies that he is indebted to the petitioner, or that he is indebted to such amount as would justify the petitioner in presenting a bankruptcy petition against him, the court, upon such security (if any) being given as the court may require, for payment to the petitioner of any debt which may be established against him in due course of law, and of the costs of establishing such debt, may stay all proceedings on the petition for such time as may be required for trial of the question relating to such debt, and such trial shall be had in manner hereinafter provided with respect to disputed debts under debtors' summonses.

Where proceedings are stayed the court may, if by reason of the delay caused by such stay of proceedings or for any other cause it thinks just, adjudge the debtor a bankrupt on the petition of some other creditor, and shall thereupon dismiss, upon such terms as it thinks just, the petition proceedings in which have been stayed as aforesaid.

10. Advertisement of order of adjudication.—A copy of an order of the court adjudging the debtor to be bankrupt shall be published in the London Gazette, and be advertised locally in such manner (if any) as may be prescribed, and the date of such order shall be the date of the adjudication for the purposes of this Act, and the production of a copy of the Gazette containing such order as aforesaid shall be conclusive evidence in all legal proceedings of the debtor having been duly adjudged a bankrupt, and of the date of the adjudication.

11. Definition of commencement of bankruptcy.—The bankruptcy of a debtor shall be deemed to have relation back to and to commence at the time of the act of bankruptcy being completed on which the order is made adjudging him to be bankrupt; or if the bankrupt is proved to have committed more acts of bankruptcy than one, to have relation back to and to commence at the time of the first of the acts of bankruptcy that may be proved to have been committed by the bankrupt within twelve months next preceding the order of adjudication; but the bankruptcy shall not relate to any prior act of bankruptcy, unless it be that at the time of committing such prior act the bankrupt was indebted to some creditor or creditors in a sum or sums sufficient to support a petition in bankruptcy, and unless such debt or debts are still remaining due at the time of the adjudication.

12. Creditors bound by bankruptcy proceedings.—Where a debtor shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, no creditor to whom the bankrupt is indebted in respect of any debt provable in the bankruptcy shall have any remedy against the property or person of the bankrupt in respect of such debt except in manner directed by this act. But this section shall not affect the power of any creditor holding a security upon the property of the bankrupt to realise or otherwise deal with such security in the same manner as he would have been entitled to realise or deal with the same if this section had not been passed.

13. Power of court, after presentation of petition, to restrain suits, &c. and appoint receiver.—The court may, at any time after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition against the debtor, restrain further proceedings in any action, suit, execution, or other legal process against the debtor in respect of any debt provable in bankruptcy, or it may allow such proceedings, whether in progress at the commencement of the bankruptcy or commenced during its continuance, to proceed upon such terms as the court may think just. The court may also, at any time after the presentation of such petition, appoint a receiver or manager of the property or business of the debtor against whom the petition is presented, or of any part thereof, and may direct immediate possession to be taken of such property or business, or any part thereof.

Appointment of Trustee.

14. Meeting of creditors for appointment of persons to administer bankrupt's property.—When an order has been made adjudging a debtor bankrupt, herein referred to as an order of adjudication the property of the bankrupt shall become divisible amongst his creditors in proportion to the debts proved by them in the bankruptcy; and for the purpose of effecting such division the court shall, as soon as may be, summon a general meeting of his creditors, and the creditors assembled at such meeting shall and may do as follows:

1. They shall, by resolution, appoint some fit person, whether a creditor or not, to fill the office of trustee of the property of the bankrupt, at such remuneration as they may from time to time determine, if any; or they may resolve to leave his appointment to the committee of inspection hereinafter mentioned:
2. They shall, when they appoint a trustee, by resolution declare what security is to be given, and to whom, by the person so appointed, before he enters on the office of trustee:
3. They shall, by resolution, appoint some other fit persons, not exceeding five in number, and being creditors qualified to vote at such first meeting of creditors as is in this act mentioned, or authorised in the prescribed form by creditors so qualified to vote, to form a committee of inspection for the purpose of superintending the administration by the trustee of the bankrupt's property:
4. They may, by resolution, give directions as to the manner in which the property is to be administered by the trustee, and it shall be the duty of the trustee to conform to such directions unless the court for some just cause otherwise orders.

15. Descriptions of bankrupt's property divisible amongst creditors.—The property of the bankrupt divisible amongst his creditors, and in this act referred to as the property of the bankrupt, shall not comprise the following particulars:

- (1.) Property held by the bankrupt on trust for any other person:
 - (2.) The tools (if any) of his trade, and the necessary wearing apparel and bedding of himself, his wife and children, to a value, inclusive of tools and apparel and bedding, not exceeding twenty pounds in the whole:
- But it shall comprise the following particulars:
- (3.) All such property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or may be acquired by or devolve on him during its continuance:
 - (4.) The capacity to exercise and to take proceedings for exercising all such powers in or over or in respect of property as might have been exercised by the bankrupt for his own benefit at the commencement of his bankruptcy or during its continuance, except the right of nomination to a vacant ecclesiastical benefice:
 - (5.) All goods and chattels being, at the commencement of the bankruptcy, in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, being a trader, by the consent and permission of the true owner, of which goods and chattels the bankrupt is reputed owner, or of which he has taken upon himself the sale or disposition as owner; provided that things in action, other than debts due to him in the course of his trade or business, shall not be deemed goods and chattels within the meaning of this clause.

16. Regulations as to first meeting of creditors.—The general meeting of creditors to be summoned as aforesaid by the court, and in this act referred to as the first meeting of creditors, shall be held in the prescribed manner and subject to the prescribed regulations as to the quorum, adjournment of meeting, and all other matters relating to the conduct of the meeting or the proceedings thereat.

Provided that—

1. The meeting shall be presided over by the registrar, or, in the event of his being unable to attend through illness or any unavoidable cause, by such chairman as the meeting may elect:
2. A person shall not be entitled to vote as a creditor unless at

Cap. 71.

Cap. 71.

or previously to the meeting he has in the prescribed manner proved a debt provable under the bankruptcy to be due to him:

3. A creditor shall not vote at the said meeting in respect of any unliquidated or contingent debt, or any debt the value of which is not ascertained:
4. A secured creditor shall, for the purpose of voting, be deemed to be a creditor only in respect of the balance (if any) due to him after deducting the value of his security; and the amount of such balance shall, until the security be realised, be determined in the prescribed manner. He may, however, at or previously to the meeting of creditors, give up the security to the trustee, and thereupon he shall rank as a creditor in respect of the whole sum due to him:
5. A "secured creditor" shall in this act mean any creditor holding any mortgage, charge, or lien on the bankrupt's estate, or any part thereof, as security for a debt due to him:
6. Votes may be given either personally or by proxy:
7. An ordinary resolution shall be decided by a majority in value of the creditors present personally or by proxy at the meeting and voting on such resolution:
8. A special resolution shall be decided by a majority in number, and three-fourths in value, of the creditors present personally or by proxy at the meeting and voting on such resolution.

17. Devolution of property on trustee.—Until a trustee is appointed the registrar shall be the trustee for the purposes of this act, and immediately upon the order of adjudication being made the property of the bankrupt shall vest in the registrar. On the appointment of a trustee the property shall forthwith pass to and vest in the trustee appointed.

The expression "trustee," when used in this act, shall include the person for the time being filling the office of trustee, whether he be the registrar or not; but when the registrar holds the office of trustee he shall, unless the court otherwise orders, in the administration of the property of the bankrupt, apply to the court for directions as to the mode of administering such property, and shall not take possession thereof unless directed by the court.

18. Evidence of appointment of trustee.—The appointment of a trustee shall be reported to the court, and the court, upon being satisfied that the requisite security has been entered into by him, shall give a certificate declaring him to be trustee of the bankruptcy named in the certificate, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the appointment of the trustee, and such appointment shall date from the date of the certificate. When the registrar holds the office of trustee, or when the trustee is changed, a like certificate of the court may be made declaring the person therein named to be trustee, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the person therein named being trustee.

PART II.

ADMINISTRATION OF PROPERTY.

General Provisions affecting Administration of Property.

19. Conduct of bankrupt.—The bankrupt shall, to the utmost of his power, aid in the realisation of his property, and the distribution of the proceeds amongst his creditors. He shall produce a statement of his affairs to the first meeting of creditors, and shall be publicly examined thereon on a day to be named by the court, and subject to such adjourned public examination as the court may direct. He shall give such inventory of his property, such list of his creditors and debtors, and of the debts due to and from them respectively, submit to such examination in respect of his property or his creditors, attend such meetings of his creditors, wait at such times on the trustee, execute such powers of attorney, conveyances, deeds, and instruments, and generally do all such acts and things in relation to his property and the distribution of the proceeds amongst his creditors, as may be reasonably required by the trustee, or may be prescribed by rules of court, or be directed by the court by any special order or orders made in reference to any particular bankruptcy, or made on the occasion of any special application by the trustee or any creditor.

If the bankrupt wilfully fail to perform the duties imposed on him by this section, or if he fail to deliver up possession to the trustee of any part of his property, which is divisible amongst his creditors under this act, and which may for the time being be in the possession or under the control of such bankrupt, he shall, in addition to any other punishment to which he may be subject, be guilty of a contempt of court, and may be punished accordingly.

20. Conduct of trustee, and appeal to court against trustee.—The trustee shall, in the administration of the property of the bankrupt, and in the distribution thereof amongst his creditors, have regard to any directions that may be given by resolution of the creditors at any general meeting, or by the committee of inspection, and any directions so given by the creditors at any general meeting shall be deemed to override any directions given by the committee of inspection; the trustee shall call a meeting of the committee of inspection once at least every three months when they shall audit his accounts, and determine whether any or what dividend is to be paid; he may also call special meetings of the said committee as he thinks necessary.

Subject to the provisions of this act, and to such directions as aforesaid, the trustee shall exercise his own discretion in the management of the estate, and its distribution amongst the creditors. The trustee may from time to time summon general meetings of the creditors for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes; he may also apply to the court, in manner prescribed, for directions in relation to any particular matter arising under the bankruptcy.

The bankrupt, or any creditor, debtor, or other person aggrieved by any act of the trustee, may apply to the court, and the court may confirm, reverse, or modify the act complained of, and make such order in the premises as it thinks just. The court may from time to time, during the continuance of a bankruptcy, summon general meetings of the creditors for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes, and may, if the court thinks fit, direct the registrar to preside at such meetings.

The trustee shall, in relation to and for the purpose of acquiring or retaining possession of the property of the bankrupt, be in the same position in all respects as if he were a receiver of such property appointed by the Court of Chancery, and the court may, on his application, enforce such acquisition or retention of property accordingly.

21. Regulations as to general meetings of creditors subsequent to first meeting.—The provisions of this act with respect to the first general meeting of creditors shall apply to any subsequent general meeting of creditors in a bankruptcy, with this exception, that subsequent meetings of creditors may be summoned by the trustee, or by a member of the committee of inspection, and that such meetings may, unless otherwise directed by the court in the case of meetings summoned by the court, be presided over by any person chosen by the creditors assembled at such meeting, and that any creditor whose debt has been proved, or the value of whose debt has been ascertained at or subsequently to such first meeting, shall be allowed to be present and to vote thereat.

Dealings with Bankrupt's Property.

22. Possession of property by trustee.—Where any portion of the property of the bankrupt consists of stock, shares in ships, shares, or any other property transferable in the books of any company, office, or person, the right to transfer such property shall be absolutely vested in the trustee to the same extent as the bankrupt might have exercised the same if he had not become bankrupt. Where any portion of such estate consists of copyhold or customary property, or any like property passing by surrender and admittance or in any similar manner, the trustee shall not be compellable to be admitted to such property, but may deal with the same in the same manner as if such property had been capable of being and had been duly surrendered or otherwise conveyed to such uses as the trustee may appoint; and any appointee of the trustee shall be admitted or otherwise invested with the property accordingly.

Where any portion of the property of the bankrupt consists of things in action, any action, suit, or other proceeding for the recovery of such things instituted by the trustee shall be instituted in his official name, as in this act provided; and such things shall, for the purpose of such action, suit, or other proceeding, be deemed to be assignable in law, and to have been duly assigned to the trustee in his official capacity.

The trustee shall, as soon as may be, take possession of the deeds, books, and documents of the bankrupt, and all other property capable of manual delivery. The trustee shall keep, in such manner as rules of court shall direct, proper books, in which he shall from time to time make or cause to be made entries or minutes of proceedings at meetings, and of such other matters as rules of court shall direct, and any creditor of the bankrupt may, subject to the control of the court, personally or by his agent inspect such books.

23. Disclaimer as to onerous property.—When any property of the bankrupt acquired by the trustee under this act consists of land of any tenure burdened with onerous covenants, of unmarketable shares in companies, of unprofitable contracts, or of any other property that is unsaleable, or not readily saleable, by reason of its binding the possessor thereof to the performance of any onerous act, or to the payment of any sum of money, the trustee, notwithstanding he has endeavoured to sell, or has taken possession of such property or exercised any act of ownership in relation thereto, may, by writing under his hand, disclaim such property, and upon the execution of such disclaimer the property disclaimed shall, if the same is a contract, be deemed to be determined from the date of the order of adjudication, and if the same is a lease be deemed to have been surrendered on the same date, and if the same be shares in any company be deemed to be forfeited from that date, and if any other species of property it shall revert to the person entitled on the determination of the estate or interest of the bankrupt, but if there shall be no person in existence so entitled, then in no case shall any estate or interest therein remain in the bankrupt. Any person interested in any disclaimed property may apply to the court, and the court may, upon such application, order possession of the disclaimed property to be delivered up to him, or make such other order as to the possession thereof as may be just.

Any person injured by the operation of this section shall be deemed a creditor of the bankrupt to the extent of such injury, and may accordingly prove the same as a debt under the bankruptcy.

24. Limitation of time for disclaimer.—The trustee shall not be entitled to disclaim any property in pursuance of this act in cases where an application in writing has been made to him by any person interested in such property, requiring such trustee to decide whether he will disclaim or not, and the trustee has for a period of not less than twenty-eight days after the receipt of such application or such further time as may be allowed by the court declined or neglected to give notice whether he disclaims the same or not.

Cap. 71.

25. Power of trustee to deal with property.—Subject to the provisions of this act, the trustee shall have power to do the following things:

- (1.) To receive and decide upon proof of debts in the prescribed manner, and for such purpose to administer oaths;
- (2.) To carry on the business of the bankrupt so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding-up of the same;
- (3.) To bring or defend any action, suit, or other legal proceeding relating to the property of the bankrupt;
- (4.) To deal with any property to which the bankrupt is beneficially entitled as tenant in tail in the same manner as the bankrupt might have dealt with the same; and the sections fifty-six to seventy-three (both inclusive) of the act of the session of the third and fourth years of the reign of King William the Fourth (chapter seventy-four), "for the Abolition of Fines, and Recoveries, and for the Substitution of more simple Modes of Assurance," shall extend and apply to proceedings in bankruptcy under this act as if those sections were here re-enacted and made applicable in terms to such proceedings;
- (5.) To exercise any powers the capacity to exercise which is vested in him under this act, and to execute all powers of attorney, deeds, and other instruments expedient or necessary for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act;
- (6.) To sell all the property of the bankrupt (including the goodwill of the business, if any, and the book debts due or growing due to the bankrupt) by public auction or private contract, with power, if he thinks fit, to transfer the whole thereof to any person or company, or to sell the same in parcels;
- (7.) To give receipts for any money received by him, which receipt shall effectually discharge the person paying such moneys from all responsibility in respect of the application thereof;
- (8.) To prove, rank, claim, and draw a dividend in the matter of the bankruptcy or sequestration of any debtor of the bankrupt.

26. Power to allow bankrupt to manage property.—The trustee may appoint the bankrupt himself to superintend the management of the property or of any part thereof, or to carry on the trade of the bankrupt (if any) for the benefit of the creditors, and in any other respect to aid in administering the property in such manner and on such terms as the creditors direct.

27. Power of trustee to compromise, &c.—The trustee may, with the sanction of the committee of inspection, do all or any of the following things:

- (1.) Mortgage or pledge any part of the property of the bankrupt for the purpose of raising money for the payment of his debts;
- (2.) Refer any dispute to arbitration, compromise all debts, claims, and liabilities, whether present or future, certain or contingent, liquidated or unliquidated, subsisting or supposed to subsist between the bankrupt and any debtor or person who may have incurred any liability to the bankrupt, upon the receipt of such sums, payable at such times, and generally upon such terms as may be agreed upon;
- (3.) Make such compromise or other arrangement as may be thought expedient with creditors, or persons claiming to be creditors in respect of any debts provable under the bankruptcy;
- (4.) Make such compromise or other arrangement as may be thought expedient with respect to any claim arising out of or incidental to the property of the bankrupt, made or capable of being made on the trustee by any person or by the trustee on any person;
- (5.) To divide in its existing form amongst the creditors, according to its estimated value, any property which from its peculiar nature or other special circumstances cannot advantageously be realised by sale.

The sanction given for the purposes of this section may be a general permission to do all or any of the above-mentioned things, or a permission to do all or any of them in any specified case or cases.

28. Power of trustee to accept composition or general scheme of arrangement.—The trustee may, with the sanction of a special resolution of the creditors assembled at any meeting of which notice has been given specifying the object of such meeting, accept any composition offered by the bankrupt, or assent to any general scheme of settlement of the affairs of the bankrupt upon such terms as may be thought expedient, and with or without a condition that the order of adjudication is to be annulled, subject nevertheless to the approval of the court, to be testified by the judge of the court signing the instrument containing the terms of such composition or scheme, or embodying such terms in an order of the court.

Where the annulling the order of adjudication is made a condition of any composition with the bankrupt or of any general scheme for the liquidation of his affairs, the court, if it approves of such composition or general scheme, shall annul the adjudication on an application made by or on behalf of any person interested, and the adjudication shall be annulled from and after the date of the order annulling the same.

The provisions of any composition or general scheme made in pursuance of this act may be enforced by the court on a motion made in a summary manner by any person interested and any disobedience of the order of the court made on such motion shall be deemed to be a contempt of court. The approval of the court shall be conclusive as to the validity of any such composition or scheme, and it shall be binding on all the creditors so far as relates to any debts due to them and provable under the bankruptcy.

29. Trustee, if a solicitor, may be paid for services.—A trustee shall not, without the consent of the committee of inspection, employ a solicitor or other agent, but where the trustee is himself a solicitor he may contract to be paid a certain sum by way of percentage or otherwise as a remuneration for his services as trustee, including all professional services, and any such contract shall, notwithstanding any law to the contrary, be lawful.

30. Trustees to pay moneys into bank.—The trustee shall pay all sums from time to time received by him into such bank as the majority of the creditors in number and value at any general meeting shall appoint, and failing such appointment into the Bank of England; and if he at any time keep in his hands any sum exceeding fifty pounds for more than ten days he shall be subject to the following liabilities; that is to say,

- (1) He shall pay interest at the rate of twenty pounds per centum per annum on the excess of such sum above fifty pounds as he may retain in his hands;
- (2) Unless he can prove to the satisfaction of the court that his reason for retaining the money was sufficient, he shall, on the application of any creditor, be dismissed from his office by the court, and shall have no claim for remuneration, and be liable to any expenses to which the creditors may be put by or in consequence of his dismissal.

Payment of Debts and Distribution of Assets.

31. Description of debts provable in bankruptcy.—Demands in the nature of unliquidated damages arising otherwise than by reason of a contract or promise shall not be provable in bankruptcy, and no person having notice of any act of bankruptcy available for adjudication against the bankrupt shall prove for any debt or liability contracted by the bankrupt subsequently to the date of his so having notice.

Save as aforesaid, all debts and liabilities, present or future, certain or contingent, to which the bankrupt is subject at the date of the order of adjudication, or to which he may become subject during the continuance of the bankruptcy by reason of any obligation incurred previously to the date of the order of adjudication, shall be deemed to be debts provable in bankruptcy, and may be proved in the prescribed manner before the trustee in the bankruptcy.

An estimate shall be made according to the rules of the court for the time being in force, so far as the same may be applicable, and where they are not applicable at the discretion of the trustee, of the value of any debt or liability provable as aforesaid, which by reason of its being subject to any contingency or contingencies, or for any other reason, does not bear a certain value.

Any person aggrieved by any estimate made by the trustee as aforesaid may appeal to the court, and the court may, if it think the value of the debt or liability incapable of being fairly estimated, make an order to that effect, and upon such order being made such debt or liability shall, for the purposes of this act, be deemed to be a debt not provable in bankruptcy, but if the court think that the value of the debt or liability is capable of being fairly estimated it may direct such value to be assessed with the consent of all the parties interested before the court itself without the intervention of a jury, or if such parties do not consent by a jury, either before the court itself or some other competent court, and may give all necessary directions for such purpose, and the amount of such value when assessed shall be provable as a debt under the bankruptcy.

"Liability" shall for the purposes of this act include any compensation for work or labour done, any obligation or possibility of an obligation to pay money or money's worth on the breach of any express or implied covenant, contract, agreement, or undertaking, whether such breach does or does not occur, or is or is not likely to occur or capable of occurring before the close of the bankruptcy, and generally it shall include any express or implied engagement, agreement or undertaking, to pay, or capable of resulting in the payment of money or money's worth, whether such payment be as respects amount fixed or unliquidated; as respects time present or future, certain or dependent on any one contingency or on two or more contingencies; as to mode of valuation capable of being ascertained by fixed rules, or assessable only by a jury, or as matter of opinion.

32. Preferential debts.—The debts hereinafter mentioned shall be paid in priority to all other debts. Between themselves such debts shall rank equally, and shall be paid in full, unless the property of the bankrupt is insufficient to meet them, in which case they shall abate in equal proportions between themselves; that is to say,

- (1) All parochial or other local rates due from him at the date of the order of adjudication, and having become due and payable within twelve months next before such time, all assessed taxes, land tax, and property or income tax assessed on him up to the fifth day of April next before the date of the order of adjudication, and not exceeding in the whole one year's assessment;
- (2) All wages or salary of any clerk or servant in the employment of the bankrupt at the date of the order of adjudication, not exceeding four months' wages or salary, and not exceeding fifty pounds; all wages of any labourer or workman in the employment of the bankrupt at the date of the order of adjudication, and not exceeding two months' wages:

Cap. 71.

Cap. 71.

Save as aforesaid, all debts provable under the bankruptcy shall be paid pari passu.

33. Preferential claim in case of apprenticeship.—Where at the time of the presentation of the petition for adjudication any person is apprenticed or is an articulated clerk to the bankrupt, the order of adjudication shall, if either the bankrupt or apprentice or clerk give notice in writing to the trustee to that effect, be a complete discharge of the indenture of apprenticeship or articles of agreement; and if any money has been paid by or on behalf of such apprentice or clerk to the bankrupt as a fee, the trustee may, on the application of the apprentice or clerk, or of some person on his behalf, pay such sum as such trustee, subject to an appeal to the court, thinks reasonable, out of the bankrupt's property to or for the use of the apprentice or clerk, regard being had to the amount paid by him or on his behalf, and to the time during which he served with the bankrupt under the indenture or articles before the commencement of the bankruptcy, and to the other circumstances of the case.

Where it appears expedient to a trustee he may, on the application of any apprentice or articulated clerk to the bankrupt, or any person acting on behalf of such apprentice or articulated clerk instead of acting under the preceding provisions of this section, transfer the indenture of apprenticeship or articles of agreement to some other person.

34. Power for landlord to distrain for rent.—The landlord or other person to whom any rent is due from the bankrupt may at any time, either before or after the commencement of the bankruptcy, distrain upon the goods or effects of the bankrupt for the rent due to him from the bankrupt, with this limitation, that if such distress for rent be levied after the commencement of the bankruptcy it shall be available only for one year's rent accrued due prior to the date of the order of adjudication, but the landlord or other person to whom the rent may be due from the bankrupt may prove under the bankruptcy for the overplus due for which the distress may not have been available.

35. Proof in case of rent and periodical payment.—When any rent or other payment falls due at stated periods, and the order of adjudication is made at any time other than one of such periods, the person entitled to such rent or payment may prove for a proportionate part thereof up to the day of the adjudication as if such rent or payment grew due from day to day.

36. Interest on debts.—Interest on any debt provable in bankruptcy may be allowed by the trustee under the same circumstances in which interest would have been allowable by a jury if an action had been brought for such debt.

37. Proof in respect of distinct contracts.—If any bankrupt is at the date of the order of adjudication liable in respect of distinct contracts as member of two or more distinct firms, or as a sole contractor, and also as member of a firm, the circumstance that such firms are in whole or in part composed of the same individuals, or that the sole contractor is also one of the joint contractors, shall not prevent proof in respect of such contracts, against the properties respectively liable upon such contracts.

38. Allowance to bankrupt for maintenance or service.—The trustee, with the consent of the creditors, testified by a resolution passed in general meeting, may from time to time, during the continuance of the bankruptcy, make such allowance as may be approved by the creditors to the bankrupt out of his property for the support of the bankrupt and his family, or in consideration of his services if he is engaged in winding-up his estate.

39. Set-off.—Where there have been mutual credits, mutual debts, or other mutual dealings between the bankrupt and any other person proving or claiming to prove a debt under his bankruptcy, an account shall be taken of what is due from the one party to the other in respect of such mutual dealings, and the sum due from the one party shall be set off against any sum due from the other party, and the balance of such account, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively; but a person shall not be entitled under this section to claim the benefit of any set-off against the property of a bankrupt in any case where he had at the time of giving credit to the bankrupt notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by such bankrupt and available against him for adjudication.

40. Provision as to secured creditor.—A creditor holding a specific security on the property of the bankrupt, or on any part thereof, may, on giving up his security, prove for his whole debt. He shall also be entitled to a dividend in respect of the balance due to him after realising or giving credit for the value of his security, in manner and at the time prescribed.

A creditor holding such security as aforesaid and not complying with the foregoing conditions shall be excluded from all share in any dividend.

Dividends.

41. Distribution of dividends.—The trustee shall from time to time, when the committee of inspection determines, declare dividend amongst the creditors who have proved to his satisfaction debts provable in bankruptcy, and shall distribute the same accordingly; and in the event of his not declaring a dividend for the space of six months, he shall summon a meeting of the creditors, and explain to them his reasons for not declaring the same.

42. Provision for creditors residing at a distance, &c.—In the calculation and distribution of a dividend it shall be obligatory on the trustee to make provision for debts provable in bankruptcy appearing from the bankrupt's statements, or otherwise, to be due to persons resident in places so distant from the place where the trustee is acting that in the ordinary course of communication they have not had sufficient time to tender their proof, or to establish them if disputed, and also for debts provable in bankruptcy, the subject of claims not yet determined.

43. Right of creditor who has not proved debt before declaration of a dividend.—Any creditor who has not proved his debt before the declaration of any dividend or dividends shall be entitled to be paid out of any moneys for the time being in the hand of the trustee any dividend or dividends he may have failed to receive before such moneys are made applicable to the payment of any future dividend or dividends, but he shall not be entitled to disturb the distribution of any dividend declared before his debt was proved by reason that he has not participated therein.

44. Final dividend.—When the trustee has converted into money all the property of the bankrupt, or so much thereof as can, in the joint opinion of himself and of the committee of inspection, be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy, he shall declare a final dividend, and give notice of the time at which it will be distributed.

45. Bankrupt entitled to surplus.—The bankrupt shall be entitled to any surplus remaining after payment of his creditors, and of the costs, charges, and expenses of the bankruptcy.

46. No action for dividend.—No action or suit for a dividend shall lie against the trustee, but if the trustee refuses to pay any dividend the court may, if it thinks fit, order the trustee to pay the same, and also to pay out of his own moneys interest thereon for the time that it is withheld, and the costs of the application.

Close of Bankruptcy.

47. Close of bankruptcy.—When the whole property of the bankrupt has been realised for the benefit of his creditors, or so much thereof as can, in the joint opinion of the trustee and committee of inspection, be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy, or a composition or arrangement has been completed, the trustee shall make a report accordingly to the court, and the court, if satisfied that the whole of the property of the bankrupt has been realised for the benefit of his creditors, or so much thereof as can be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy, or that a composition or arrangement has been completed, shall make an order that the bankruptcy has closed, and the bankruptcy shall be deemed to have closed at and after the date of such order.

A copy of the order closing the bankruptcy may be published in the London Gazette, and the production of a copy of such Gazette containing a copy of the order shall be conclusive evidence of the order having been made and of the date and contents thereof.

Discharge of Bankrupt.

48. Order of discharge.—When a bankruptcy is closed, or at any time during its continuance, with the assent of the creditors testified by a special resolution, the bankrupt may apply to the court for an order of discharge; but such discharge shall not be granted unless it is proved to the court that one of the following conditions has been fulfilled, that is to say, either that a dividend of not less than ten shillings in the pound has been paid out of his property, or might have been paid except through the negligence or fraud of the trustee, or that a special resolution of his creditors has been passed to the effect that his bankruptcy or the failure to pay ten shillings in the pound has, in their opinion, arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt cannot justly be held responsible, and that they desire that an order of discharge should be granted to him; and the court may suspend for such time as it deems to be just, or withhold altogether, the order of discharge in the circumstances following; namely, if it appears to the court on the representation of the creditors made by special resolution, of the truth of which representation the court is satisfied, or by other sufficient evidence, that the bankrupt has made default in giving up to his creditors the property which he is required by this act to give up; or that a prosecution has been commenced against him in pursuance of the provisions relating to the punishment of fraudulent debtors, contained in "The Debtors Act, 1869," in respect of any offence alleged to have been committed by him against the said act.

49. Effect of order of discharge.—An order of discharge shall not release the bankrupt from any debt or liability incurred by means of any fraud or breach of trust, nor from any debt or liability whereof he has obtained forbearance by any fraud, but it shall release the bankrupt from all other debts provable under the bankruptcy, with the exception of—

- (1.) Debts due to the Crown;
- (2.) Debts with which the bankrupt stands charged at the suit of the Crown or of any person for any offence against a statute relating to any branch of the public revenue, or at the suit of the sheriff or other public officer on a bail bond entered into for the appearance of any person prosecuted for any such offence;

And he shall not be discharged from such excepted debts unless the Commissioners of the Treasury certify in writing their consent to his being discharged therefrom.

An order of discharge shall be sufficient evidence of the bankruptcy, and of the validity of the proceedings thereon, and in any proceedings that may be instituted against a bankrupt who has obtained an order of discharge in respect of any debt from which he is released by such order, the bankrupt may plead that the cause of action occurred before his discharge, and may give this act and the special matter in evidence.

50. Exception of joint debtors.—The order of discharge shall not release any person who, at the date of the order of adjudication, was a partner with the bankrupt, or was jointly bound or had made any joint contract with him.

Release of Trustee.

51. Release of trustee.—When the bankruptcy is closed the trustee shall call a meeting of the creditors to consider an application to be made to the court for his release. At the meeting the trustee shall lay before the assembled creditors an account showing the manner in which the bankruptcy has been conducted, with a list of the unclaimed dividends, if any, and of the property, if any, outstanding, and shall inform the meeting that he proposes to apply to the court for a release.

The creditors assembled at the meeting may express their opinion as to the conduct of the trustee, and they, or any of them, may appear before the court and oppose the release of the trustee.

The court, after hearing what, if anything, can be urged against the release of the trustee, shall grant or withhold the release accordingly, and, if it withhold the release shall make such order as it thinks just, charging the trustee with the consequences of any act or default he may have done or made contrary to his duty, and shall suspend his release until such charging order has been complied with, and the court thinks just to grant the release of the trustee.

52. Duty of trustee as to unclaimed dividends and outstanding property.—Unclaimed dividends, and any other moneys arising from the property of the bankrupt, remaining under the control of the trustee at the close of the bankruptcy of any bankrupt, or accruing thereafter, shall be accounted and paid over to such account as may be directed by the rules of court to be made with the sanction of the Treasury; and any parties entitled thereto may claim the same in manner directed by such rules. The trustee shall also deliver a list of any outstanding property of the bankrupt to the prescribed persons, and the same shall, when practicable, be got in and applied for the benefit of the creditors in manner prescribed.

53. Effect of relief of trustee.—The order of the court releasing the trustee of a bankruptcy shall discharge him from all liability in respect of any act done or default made by him in the administration of the affairs of the bankrupt, or otherwise in relation to his conduct as trustee of such bankrupt, but such order may be revoked by the court on proof that it was obtained by fraud.

Status of undischarged Bankrupt.

54. Status of undischarged bankrupt.—Where a person who has been made bankrupt has not obtained his discharge, then, from and after the close of his bankruptcy, the following consequences shall ensue:

- (1.) No portion of a debt provable under the bankruptcy shall be enforced against the property of the person so made bankrupt until the expiration of three years from the close of the bankruptcy; and during that time, if he pay to his creditors such additional sum as will, with the dividend paid out of his property during the bankruptcy, make up ten shillings in the pound, he shall be entitled to an order of discharge in the same manner as if a dividend of ten shillings in the pound had originally been paid out of his property;
- (2.) At the expiration of a period of three years from the close of the bankruptcy, if the debtor made bankrupt has not obtained an order of discharge, any balance remaining unpaid in respect of any debt proved in such bankruptcy (but without interest in the meantime) shall be deemed to be a subsisting debt in the nature of a judgment-debt, and, subject to the rights of any persons who have become creditors of the debtor since the close of his bankruptcy, may be enforced against any property of the debtor, with the sanction of the court which adjudicated such debtor a bankrupt, or of the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in the place where the property is situated, but to the extent only, and at the time and in manner directed by such court, and after giving such notice and doing such acts as may be prescribed in that behalf.

Audit.

55. Appointment of comptroller.—The trustee having had his quarterly statement of accounts audited by the committee of inspection, shall, within the prescribed time, forward the certified statement in the prescribed form to an officer to be called the comptroller in bankruptcy, and if he fail to do so he shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of court to be punishable accordingly. The first and any subsequent comptroller shall be appointed by the Lord Chancellor, and hold office during his pleasure, and shall be paid such salary as the Lord Chancellor may, with the sanction of the Treasury, direct. The comptroller shall be provided with such office in London, and with such officers, clerks, and servants, as may be directed by the Lord

Chancellor, with the approval of the Treasury. The officers, clerks, and servants in the office of the comptroller shall be appointed and dismissible by the comptroller, and there shall be allowed and paid to him such sum as the Treasury may from time to time direct for the expenses of his office, and of such clerks and other persons as may be deemed necessary by the Treasury.

56. Return of accounts to comptroller.—Every trustee of a bankrupt shall from time to time, as may be prescribed, and not less than once in every year during the bankruptcy, transmit to the comptroller a statement showing the proceedings in such bankruptcy up to the date of the statement containing the prescribed particulars, and made out in the prescribed form; and any trustee failing to transmit accounts in compliance with this section shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of court, and be punishable accordingly.

57. Duty of comptroller.—The comptroller shall examine the statements transmitted to him, and shall call the trustee to account for any misfeasance, neglect, or omission which may appear on such statements; and may require the trustee to make good any loss the estate of the bankrupt may have sustained, by such misfeasance, neglect, or omission. If the trustee fail to comply with such requisition of the comptroller, the comptroller may report the same to the court; and the court, after hearing the explanation, if any, of the trustee, shall make such order in the premises as it thinks just.

58. Powers of comptroller.—The comptroller may at any time require any trustee to answer any inquiry made by him in relation to any bankruptcy in which such trustee is engaged, and may, if he think fit, apply to the court to examine on oath such trustee or any other person concerning such bankruptcy; he may also direct a local investigation to be made of the books and vouchers of the trustees.

PART III.

CONSTITUTION AND POWERS OF COURT.

Description of Court.

59. Court to consist of London Court and County Courts.—From and after the commencement of this act the following provisions shall take effect with respect to the courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and their officers; that is to say,

If the person sought to be adjudged a bankrupt reside or carry on business within the London bankruptcy district as hereinafter defined, or be not resident in England, then "the court" shall mean, for the purposes of this act, the Court of Bankruptcy in London as constituted by this act, and hereinafter referred to as the London Bankruptcy Court:

If the person sought to be adjudged a bankrupt, being resident in England, do not reside or carry on business within the London bankruptcy district, then "the court" shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained for removing the proceedings, mean the County Court of the district in which such person resides or carries on business, hereinafter referred to as the local Bankruptcy Court.

60. Definition of the London bankruptcy district.—The London bankruptcy district shall, for the purposes of this act, comprise the following places; that is to say, the City of London and the liberties thereof, and all such parts of the metropolis and other places as are situated within the district of any County Court described as a metropolitan County Court in the list contained in the second schedule hereto.

61. Constitution of the London Bankruptcy Court.—The London Bankruptcy Court shall from and after the commencement of this act consist of a judge, to be called the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, and, subject to the provisions of this act with respect to the officers of the existing London Bankruptcy Court, of such number of registrars not exceeding four, clerks, ushers, and other subordinate officers, as may be determined by the Chief Judge with the sanction of the Treasury.

Subject to the provisions of this act with respect to the appointment of the first Chief Judge, the office of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy shall be filled by such one of the judges of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of common law or of equity as may, with his assent, be assigned to hold such office by the Lord Chancellor; the judge so assigned shall hold the office of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy in addition to the office of judge in the court to which he belongs. Any puisne judge or vice-chancellor appointed to any of the said courts after the passing of this act shall, when required by the Lord Chancellor, perform the duties of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

62. Appointment of registrars and other officers.—Subject to the provisions in this act with respect to the officers of the existing London Bankruptcy Court, the registrars, clerks, ushers, and other subordinate officers thereof shall be appointed by the Chief Judge for the time being, and may be removed by him and others appointed in their stead if the judge is of opinion that they are negligent, unskilful, or untrustworthy in their performance of their duties, or ought in his opinion to be removed for any other just cause.

63. Salaries of officers.—Subject as aforesaid, there shall be paid, out of moneys provided by Parliament, to the registrars, clerks, ushers, and other subordinate officers such salaries as the Chief Judge with the sanction of the Treasury may determine.

64. Duties of subordinate officers of court.—Subject as aforesaid, the registrars, clerks, ushers, and other subordinate officers of the London Bankruptcy Court shall perform such duties as may from time to time be assigned to them by the Chief Judge with the assent of the Lord Chancellor.

Cap. 71.

65. Jurisdiction of the London Court of Bankruptcy.—The London Court of Bankruptcy shall continue to be a court of law and of equity and a principal court of record, and the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy shall have all the powers, jurisdiction, and privileges possessed by any judge of Her Majesty's Superior Courts of common law at Westminster, or by any judge of Her Majesty's High Court of Chancery, and the orders of such judge shall be of the same force as if they were judgments in the Superior Courts of common law or decrees in the High Court of Chancery. The Chief Judge in Bankruptcy may sit in chambers, and when in chambers shall have the same jurisdiction and exercise the same powers as if sitting in open court.

66. Jurisdiction of County-Court judges.—Every judge of a local court of bankruptcy shall, for the purposes of this act, in addition to his ordinary powers as a County-Court judge, have all the powers and jurisdiction of a judge of Her Majesty's High Court of Chancery, and the orders of such judge may be enforced accordingly, in manner prescribed.

67. Powers of court to delegate authority to registrar.—The Chief Judge in Bankruptcy and every judge of a local court of bankruptcy may, subject and in accordance with the rules of court for the time being in force, delegate to the registrar or to any other officer of his court such of the powers vested in him by this act as it may be expedient for the judge to delegate to him.

68. Scale of fees.—The Lord Chancellor shall, with the sanction of the Treasury, from time to time prescribe a scale of fees to be charged for any business done by any court or officer thereof under this act; and the Treasury shall direct whether the same shall be imposed by stamps or otherwise, and by whom and in what manner the same shall be collected, accounted for, and appropriated, and whether any and what remuneration shall be allowed to any person performing any duties under this act.

69. Judges and officers in bankruptcy to be ineligible to sit in Parliament.—No judge, registrar, or officer having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, or attached to any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, shall, during his continuance in office, be capable of being elected or sitting as a member of the House of Commons; and no registrar or officer of such court shall, during his continuance in office, either directly or indirectly, by himself or partner, act as an attorney or solicitor in any proceeding in any bankruptcy in any court of which he is registrar or officer, or in any appeal from such court, or in any prosecution of a bankrupt by order of such court, under pain of dismissal by the judge; and such dismissal shall be in writing, stating the reason for the same; and a copy thereof shall be sent to the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, who, if he shall see fit, may reinstate such registrar or officer.

70. Solicitors of Court of Chancery may practise in Bankruptcy Court.—Every attorney and solicitor of the Superior Courts shall be, and may practise as a solicitor of, and in the Court of Bankruptcy, and in matters before the Chief Judge or registrars, in the London Court of Bankruptcy, in court or in chambers, may appear and be heard without being required to employ counsel; and if any person not being such attorney or solicitor practises in the Court of Bankruptcy as attorney or solicitor, he shall be deemed guilty of a contempt of court.

71. Appeal from courts.—Every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act may review, rescind, or vary any order made by it in pursuance of this act. Any person aggrieved by any order of a local bankruptcy court in respect of a matter of fact or of law made in pursuance of this act may appeal to the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, and it shall be lawful for such judge to alter, reverse, or confirm such order as he thinks just. Any order made by the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, whether in respect of a matter brought before him on appeal or not, shall be subject to an appeal to the Court of Appeal in Chancery (which court, for the purposes of this act, shall be and form a court of record, and shall have all the jurisdiction, powers, and authorities of the Court of Bankruptcy, to be exercisable either originally or on appeal, and shall have all the powers and authorities of the Court of Chancery relative to the trial of questions of fact, by jury, issue, or otherwise), and also, with the leave of the Court of Appeal, to the House of Lords, but no appeal shall be entertained under this act except in conformity to such rules of court as may for the time being in force in relation to such appeal.

72. General power of bankruptcy courts.—Subject to the provisions of this act, every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act shall have full power to decide all questions of priorities, and all other questions whatsoever whether of law or fact, arising in any case of bankruptcy coming within the cognisance of such court, or which the court may deem it expedient or necessary to decide for the purpose of doing complete justice or making a complete distribution of property in any such case; and no such court as aforesaid shall be subject to be restrained in the execution of its powers under this act by the order of any other court, nor shall any appeal lie from its decisions, except in manner directed by this act; and if in any proceeding in bankruptcy there arises any question of fact which the parties desire to be tried before a jury instead of by the court itself, or which the court thinks ought to be tried by a jury, the court may direct such trial to be had, and such trial may be had accordingly, in the London Court of Bankruptcy, in the same manner as if it were the trial of an issue in one of the Superior Courts of common law, and in the County Court in the manner in which jury trials in ordinary cases are by law held in such court.

Orders and Warrants of Court.

73. Enforcement of warrant and orders of courts.—Any order made by a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in England under this act shall be enforced in Scotland and Ireland in the courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in such countries respectively, in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the courts which are hereby required to enforce the same; and in like manner any order made by the court in Scotland having jurisdiction in bankruptcy shall be enforced in England and Ireland, and any order made by the court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in Ireland shall be enforced in England and Scotland by the courts respectively having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in the division of the United Kingdom where the orders made require to be enforced, and in the same manner in all respects as if such order had been made by the court required to enforce the same in a case of bankruptcy within its own jurisdiction.

74. Courts in England to be auxiliary to other courts, &c.—The London Bankruptcy Court, the local bankruptcy court, the courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in Scotland and Ireland, and every British court elsewhere having jurisdiction in bankruptcy or insolvency, and the officers of such courts respectively, shall severally act in aid of and be auxiliary to each other in all matters of bankruptcy, and an order of the court seeking aid, together with a request to another of the said courts, shall be deemed sufficient to enable the latter court to exercise, in regard to the matters directed by such order, the like jurisdiction which the court which made the request, as well as the court to which the request is made, could exercise in regard to similar matters within their respective jurisdictions.

75. Examination in Scotland or Ireland.—Any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in England under this act may, if it thinks fit, order that a person named in the order being in Scotland or in Ireland shall be examined there.

76. Warrants of bankruptcy courts.—Any warrant of a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy in England under this act may be enforced in Scotland, Ireland, the Isle of Man, the Channel Islands, and elsewhere in Her Majesty's dominions, in the same manner and subject to the same privileges in and subject to which a warrant issued by any justice of the peace against a person for an indictable offence against the laws of England may be executed in such countries respectively in pursuance of the acts of Parliament in that behalf; and any search warrant issued by a court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act for the discovery of any property of a bankrupt may be executed in manner prescribed or in the same manner and subject to the same privileges in and subject to which a search warrant for property supposed to be stolen may be executed according to law.

77. Commitment to prison.—Where any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act commits any person to prison, the commitment may be to such convenient prison as the court thinks expedient, and if the gaoler of any prison refuses to receive any prisoner so committed, he shall be liable for every such refusal to a penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds.

General Rules.

78. General rules to be made by Lord Chancellor, with advice of Chief Judge.—The Lord Chancellor, with the advice of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, may from time to time make, and may from time to time revoke and alter, general rules, in this act described as rules of court, for the effectual execution of this act, and of the objects thereof, and the regulation of the practice and procedure of bankruptcy petitions and the proceedings thereon.

Any general rules made as aforesaid may prescribe regulations as to the service of bankruptcy petitions, including provisions for substituted service; as to the valuing of any debts provable in a bankruptcy; as to the valuation of securities held by creditors; as to the giving or withholding interest or discount on or in respect of debts or dividends; as to the funds out of which costs are to be paid, the order of payment, and the amount and taxation thereof; and as to any other matter or thing, whether similar or not to those above enumerated, in respect to which it may be expedient to make rules for carrying into effect the objects of this act; and any rules so made shall be deemed to be within the powers conferred by this act, and shall be of the same force as if they were enacted in the body of this act.

Any rules made in pursuance of the section shall be laid before Parliament within three weeks after they are made, if Parliament be then sitting; and if Parliament be not then sitting, within three weeks after the beginning of the then next session of Parliament, and any rules so made shall be judicially noticed.

Until rules have been made in pursuance of this act, and so far as such rules do not extend, the principles, practice, and rules on which courts having jurisdiction in bankruptcy have heretofore acted in dealing with bankruptcy proceedings shall be observed by any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy cases under this act.

Change of Jurisdiction by Chancellor.

79. Change of jurisdiction by Lord Chancellor.—Notwithstanding anything in this act contained, the Lord Chancellor may from time to time, by order under his hand, exclude any County Court from having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and for the purposes of bankruptcy jurisdiction may attach its district or any part thereof to any other County Court or courts, and may from time to time revoke or alter any order so made.

Cap. 71.

Cap 71.

PART IV.

SUPPLEMENTAL PROVISIONS.

As to Proceedings.

80. Supplemental regulations as to proceedings in bankruptcy.—The following regulations shall be made with respect to proceedings in bankruptcy; namely,

- (1.) Every bankruptcy petition shall be accompanied by an affidavit of the petitioner in the prescribed form, verifying the statements contained in such petition:
- (2.) Where two or more bankruptcy petitions are presented against the same debtor or against debtors being members of the same partnership, the court may consolidate the proceedings, or any of them, upon such terms as the court thinks fit:
- (3.) Where proceedings against the debtor are instituted in more courts than one the London Court of Bankruptcy may, on the application of any creditor direct the transfer of such proceedings to the London Court of Bankruptcy, or to any local bankruptcy court:
- (4.) Where the petitioner does not proceed with due diligence on his petition the court may substitute as petitioner any other creditor to whom the debtor may be indebted in the amount required by this act, in the case of a petitioning creditor:
- (5.) Where the creditors resolve by a special resolution that it will be more convenient that the proceedings in any local bankruptcy court should be transferred to the London Court or to some other local court, or where the judge of a local court certifies that in his opinion the bankruptcy would be more advantageously conducted in the London Court or in some other local court, and the creditors do not by resolution object to the transfer, the petition shall be transferred to and all subsequent proceedings thereon had in the London Court or such other local court:
- (6.) Subject to the provisions of this act, every court having original jurisdiction in bankruptcy shall be deemed to be the same court, and to have jurisdiction throughout England; and cases may be transferred from one court to another in such manner as may be prescribed:
- (7.) A corporation may prove a debt, vote, and otherwise act in bankruptcy, by an agent duly authorised under the seal of the corporation:
- (8.) A creditor may, in the prescribed manner, by instrument in writing, appoint a person to represent him in all matters relating to any debtor or his affairs in which a creditor is concerned in pursuance of this act, and such representative shall thereupon, for all the purposes of this act, stand in the same position as the creditor who appointed him:
- (9.) When a debtor who has been adjudicated a bankrupt dies, the court may order that the proceedings in the matter be continued as if he were alive:
- (10.) The court may, at any time, on proof to its satisfaction that proceedings in bankruptcy ought to be stayed, by reason that negotiations are pending for the liquidation of the affairs of the bankrupt by arrangement or for the acceptance of a composition by the creditors in pursuance of the provisions hereinafter contained, or on proof to its satisfaction of any other sufficient reason for staying the same, make an order staying the same, either altogether or for a limited time, on such terms and subject to such conditions as the court may think just.

81. Consequences of annulling of adjudication.—Whenever any adjudication in bankruptcy is annulled all sales and dispositions of property and payments duly made, and all acts theretofore done, by the trustee or any person acting under his authority, or by the court, shall be valid, but the property of the debtor who was adjudged a bankrupt shall in such case vest in such person as the court may appoint, or in default of any such appointment revert to the bankrupt for all his estate or interest therein upon such terms and subject to such conditions, if any, as the court may declare by order. A copy of the order of the court annulling the adjudication of a debtor as a bankrupt shall be forthwith published in the London Gazette and advertised locally in the prescribed manner, and the production of a copy of the Gazette containing such order shall be conclusive evidence of the fact of the adjudication having been annulled, and of the terms of the order annulling the same.

82. Formal defects not to invalidate proceedings.—No proceeding in bankruptcy shall be invalidated by any formal defect or by any irregularity, unless the court before which an objection is made to such proceeding is of opinion that substantial injustice has been caused by such defect or irregularity, and that such injustice cannot be remedied by any order of such court.

As to Trustees and Committee of Inspection.

83. Regulations as to trustees, &c.—The following regulations shall be made with respect to the trustees and committee of inspection.

- (1.) The creditors may, if they think fit, appoint more persons than one to the office of trustee, and where more than one are appointed they shall declare whether any act required or authorised to be done by the trustee is to be done by all or any one or more of such persons, but all such persons are in this act included under the term "trustee," and shall be joint tenants of the property of the bankrupt. The creditors may also appoint persons to act as trustees in succession in the event of one or more of the persons first named declining to accept the office of trustee:
- (2.) If any vacancy occur in the office of trustee by death, resignation, or otherwise, the creditors in general meeting shall fill up such vacancy, and a general meeting for the purpose of filling up such vacancy may be convened by the continuing trustee, if there be more than one, or by the registrar on the requisition of any creditor:
- (3.) If, through any cause whatever, there is no trustee acting during the continuance of a bankruptcy, the registrar of the court for the time being having jurisdiction in the bankruptcy shall act as such trustee:
- (4.) The court may, upon cause shown, remove any trustee. The creditors may, by special resolution at a meeting specially called for that purpose, of which seven days' notice has been given, remove the trustee and appoint another person to fill his office, and the court shall give a certificate declaring him to be the trustee:
- (5.) If a trustee be adjudged bankrupt, he shall cease to be trustee, and the registrar shall, if there be no other trustee, call a meeting of creditors for the appointment of another trustee in his place:
- (6.) The property of the bankrupt shall pass from trustee to trustee, including under that term the registrar when he fills the office of trustee, and shall vest in the trustee for the time being during his continuance in office, without any conveyance, assignment, or transfer whatever:
- (7.) The trustee of a bankrupt may sue and be sued by the official name of "the trustee of the property of a bankrupt," inserting the name of the bankrupt, and by that name may hold property of every description, make contracts, sue and be sued, enter into any engagements binding upon himself and his successors in office, and do all other acts necessary or expedient to be done in the execution of his office:
- (8.) The certificate of appointment of a trustee shall, for all purposes of any law in force in any part of the British dominions requiring registration, enrolment, or recording of conveyances or assignments of property, be deemed to be a conveyance or assignment of property, and may be registered, enrolled, and recorded accordingly:
- (9.) All acts and things by this act authorised or required to be done by or to the registrar may be done within the district of each court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy by or to the registrar of that court:
- (10.) Any member of the committee of inspection may resign his office by notice in writing signed by him, and delivered to the trustee:
- (11.) The creditors may by resolution fix the quorum required to be present at a meeting of the committee of inspection:
- (12.) Any member of the committee of inspection may also be removed by a special resolution at any meeting of creditors of which the prescribed notice has been given, stating the object of the meeting:
- (13.) On any vacancy occurring in the office of a member of the committee of inspection by removal, death, resignation, or otherwise, the trustee shall convene a meeting of creditors for the purpose of filling up such vacancy:
- (14.) The continuing members of the committee of inspection may act, notwithstanding any vacancy in their body; and where the number of members of the committee of inspection is for the time being less than five, the creditors may increase that number so that it do not exceed five:
- (15.) No defect or irregularity in the election of a trustee or of a member of the committee of inspection shall vitiate any act bonâ fide done by him; and no act or proceeding of the trustee or of the creditors shall be invalid by reason of any failure of the creditors to elect all or any members of the committee of inspection:
- (16.) If a member of the committee of inspection become a bankrupt his office shall thereupon become vacant:
- (17.) Where there is no committee of inspection, any act or thing or any direction or consent by this act authorised or required to be done or given by such committee may be done or given by the court on the application of the trustee.

84. Power of court, on failure of creditors, to appoint trustee.—The registrar may adjourn the first meeting of creditors from time to time and from place to place, subject to the directions of the court; but if, at such first meeting of creditors or at some adjournment thereof, no trustee is appointed by reason of the prescribed quorum not being present, or for any other reason whatever, the court may annul the adjudication, unless it deems it expedient to carry on the bankruptcy with the aid of the registrar as trustee. Moreover if at any time during the bankruptcy no new trustee is appointed to fill a vacancy in that office, the court may either carry on the bankruptcy with the aid of the registrar as trustee or annul the order of adjudication, as it thinks just.

Cap. 71.

Cap. 71.

As to Power over Bankrupt.

85. Post letters addressed to bankrupt.—The court, upon the application of the trustee, may from time to time order that, for such time as the court thinks fit, not exceeding three months from the date of the order of adjudication, post letters addressed to the bankrupt at any place or any of the places mentioned in the order, shall be redirected, sent, or delivered by the Postmaster-General or the officers acting under him, to the trustee or otherwise as the court directs, and the same shall be done accordingly.

86. Arrest of bankrupt under certain circumstances.—The court may, by warrant addressed to any constable or prescribed officer of the court, cause a debtor to be arrested, and any books, papers, moneys, goods, and chattels in his possession to be seized, and him and them to be safely kept as prescribed until such time as the court may order, under the following circumstances:

- (1.) If after a petition of bankruptcy is presented against such debtor, it appear to the court that there is probable reason for believing that he is about to go abroad or to quit his place of residence with a view of avoiding service of the petition, or of avoiding appearing to the petition, or of avoiding examination in respect of his affairs, or otherwise delaying or embarrassing the proceedings in bankruptcy:
- (2.) If, after a petition in bankruptcy has been presented against such debtor, it appear to the court that there is probable cause for believing that he is about to remove his goods or chattels with a view of preventing or delaying such goods or chattels being taken possession of by the trustee, or that there is probable ground for believing that he has concealed or is about to conceal or destroy any of his goods or chattels, or any books, documents, or writings which might be of use to his creditors in the course of his bankruptcy:
- (3.) If after the service of the petition on such debtor, or after an adjudication in bankruptcy against him, he remove any goods or chattels in his possession above the value of five pounds, without the leave of the trustee, or if, without good cause shown, he fails to attend any examination ordered by the court.

As to Property devolving on Trustee.

87. Proceeds of sale and seizure of goods.—Where the goods of any trader have been taken in execution in respect of a judgment for a sum exceeding fifty pounds and sold, the sheriff, or in the case of a sale under the direction of the County Court, the high bailiff or other officer of the County Court, shall retain the proceeds of such sale in his hands for a period of fourteen days, and upon notice being served on him within that period of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against such trader, shall hold the proceeds of such sale, after deducting expenses, on trust to pay the same to the trustee; but if no notice of such petition having been presented be served on him within such period of fourteen days, or if, such notice having been served, the trader against whom the petition has been presented is not adjudged a bankrupt on such petition, or on any other petition of which the sheriff, high bailiff, or other officer has notice, he may deal with the proceeds of such sale in the same manner as he would have done had no notice of the presentation of a bankruptcy petition been served on him.

88. Sequestration of ecclesiastical benefice.—Where a bankrupt is a beneficed clergyman, the trustee may apply for a sequestration of the profits of the benefice, and the certificate of the appointment of the trustee shall be sufficient authority for the granting of sequestration without any writ or other proceeding, and the same shall accordingly be issued as on a writ of levari facias founded on a judgment against the bankrupt, and shall have priority over any other sequestration issued after the commencement of the bankruptcy, except a sequestration issued before the date of the order of adjudication by or on behalf of a person who at the time of the issue thereof had not notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication; but the sequestrator shall allow out of the profits of the benefice to the bankrupt, while he performs the duties of the parish or place, such an annual sum payable quarterly, as the bishop of the diocese in which the benefice is situate directs; and the bishop may appoint to the bankrupt such or the like stipend as he might by law have appointed to a curate duly licensed to serve the benefice in case the bankrupt had been non-resident.

89. Appropriation of portion of pay of officers to creditors.—Where a bankrupt is or has been an officer of the army or navy, or an officer or clerk or otherwise employed or engaged in the civil service of the Crown, or is in the enjoyment of any pension or compensation granted by the Treasury, the trustee during the bankruptcy, and the registrar after the close of the bankruptcy, shall receive for distribution amongst the creditors so much of the bankrupt's pay, half-pay, salary, emolument, or pension as the court, upon the application of the trustee, thinks just and reasonable, to be paid in such manner and at such times as the court, with the consent in writing of the chief officer of the department under which the pay, half-pay, salary, emolument, pension, or compensation is enjoyed, directs.

90. Appropriation of portion of salary to creditors.—Where a bankrupt is in the receipt of a salary or income other than as aforesaid, the court, upon the application of the trustee, shall from time to time make such order as it thinks just for the payment of such salary or income, or of any part thereof, to the trustee during the bankruptcy, and to the registrar if necessary after the close of the bankruptcy, to be applied by him in such manner as the court may direct.

91. Avoidance of voluntary settlements.—Any settlement of property made by a trader not being a settlement made before and in consideration of marriage, or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, or a settlement made on or for the wife or children of the settlor of property which has accrued to the settlor after marriage in right of his wife, shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of such settlement, be void as against the trustee of the bankrupt appointed under this act, and shall, if the settlor becomes bankrupt at any subsequent time within ten years after the date of such settlement, unless the parties claiming under such settlement can prove that the settlor was at the time of making the settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in such settlement, be void against such trustee. Any covenant or contract made by a trader, in consideration of marriage, for the future settlement upon or for his wife or children of any money or property wherein he had not at the date of his marriage any estate or interest, whether vested or contingent in possession or remainder, and not being money or property of or in right of his wife, shall, upon his becoming bankrupt before such property or money has been actually transferred or paid pursuant to such contract or covenant, be void against his trustee appointed under this act.

"Settlement" shall for the purposes of this section include any conveyance or transfer of property.

92. Avoidance of fraudulent preferences.—Every conveyance or transfer of property, or charge thereon made, every payment made, every obligation incurred, and every judicial proceeding taken or suffered by any person unable to pay his debts as they become due from his own moneys in favour of any creditor, or any person in trust for any creditor, with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors, shall, if the person making, taking, paying, or suffering the same become bankrupt within three months after the date of making, taking, paying, or suffering the same, be deemed fraudulent and void as against the trustee of the bankrupt appointed under this act; but this section shall not affect the rights of a purchaser, payee, or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration.

93. Payment of money by agents to trustee.—Any treasurer or other officer, or any banker, attorney, or agent of a bankrupt, shall pay and deliver to the trustee all moneys and securities in his possession or power, as such officer or agent, if he be not by law entitled to retain as against the bankrupt or the trustee; if he do not he shall be guilty of a contempt of court, and may be punished accordingly on the application of the trustee.

94. Protection of certain transactions with bankrupt.—Nothing in this act contained shall render invalid.

- (1.) Any payment made in good faith and for value received to any bankrupt before the date of the order of adjudication by a person not having at the time of such payment notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication:
- (2.) Any payment or delivery of money or goods belonging to a bankrupt, made to such bankrupt by a depositary of such money or goods before the date of the order of adjudication, who had not at the time of such payment or delivery notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication.
- (3.) Any contract or dealing with any bankrupt, made in good faith and for valuable consideration, before the date of the order of adjudication, by a person not having at the time of making such contract or dealing, notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication.

95. Protection of certain transactions entered into by or in relation to the property of the bankrupt.—Subject and without prejudice to the provisions of this act relating to the proceeds of the sale and seizure of goods of a trader, and to the provisions of this act avoiding certain settlements, and avoiding, on the ground of their constituting fraudulent preferences, certain conveyances, charges, payments, and judicial proceedings, the following transactions by and in relation to the property of a bankrupt shall be valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy,—

- (1.) Any disposition or contract with respect to the disposition of property by conveyance, transfer, charge, delivery of goods, payment of money, or otherwise howsoever made by any bankrupt in good faith and for valuable consideration, before the date of the order of adjudication, with any person not having at the time of the making of such disposition of property notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication:

Cap. 71.

- (2.) Any execution or attachment against the land of the bankrupt, executed in good faith by seizure before the date of the order of adjudication, if the person on whose account such execution or attachment was issued had not at the time of the same being so executed by seizure notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication:
- (3.) Any execution or attachment against the goods of any bankrupt, executed in good faith by seizure and sale before the date of the order of adjudication, if the person on whose account such execution or attachment was issued had not at the time of the same being executed by seizure and sale notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication.

As to Discovery of Bankrupt's Property.

96. Power of court to summon persons before it suspected of having property of bankrupt.—The court may, on application of the trustee, at any time after an order of adjudication has been made against a bankrupt, summon before it the bankrupt or his wife, or any person whatever known or suspected to have in his possession any of the estate or effects belonging to the bankrupt, or supposed to be indebted to the bankrupt, or any person whom the court may deem capable of giving information respecting the bankrupt, his trade dealings or property, and the court may require any such person to produce any documents in his custody or power relating to the bankrupt, his dealings or property; and if any person so summoned, after having been tendered a reasonable sum, refuses to come before the court at the time appointed, or refuses to produce such documents, having no lawful impediment made known to the court at the time of its sitting and allowed by it, the court may, by warrant addressed as aforesaid, cause such person to be apprehended and brought up for examination.

97. Examination of parties by court.—The court may examine upon oath, either by word of mouth or by written interrogatories, any person so brought before it in manner aforesaid concerning the bankrupt, his dealings or property.

98. Order of court for payment of amount admitted on examination.—If any person on examination before the court admit he is indebted to the bankrupt, the court may, on the application of the trustee, order him to pay to the trustee, at such time and in such manner as to the court seems expedient, the amount admitted, or any part thereof, either in full discharge of the whole amount in question or not, as the court thinks fit, with or without costs of the examination.

99. Seizure of property of bankrupt.—Any person acting under warrant of the court may seize any property of the bankrupt divisible amongst his creditors under this act, and in the bankrupt's custody or possession, or in that of any other person, and with a view to such seizure may break open any house, building, or room of the bankrupt where the bankrupt is supposed to be, or any building or receptacle of the bankrupt where any of his property is supposed to be; and where the court is satisfied that there is reason to believe that property of the bankrupt is concealed in a house or place not belonging to him, the court may, if it thinks fit, grant a search warrant to any constable or prescribed officer of the court, who may execute the same according to the tenor thereof.

Joint and separate Estates.

100. Power to present petition against one partner.—Any creditor whose debt is sufficient to entitle him to present a bankruptcy petition against all the partners of a firm may present such petition against any one or more partners of such firm without including the others.

101. Power to dismiss petition against some respondents only.—Where there are more respondents than one to a petition, the court may dismiss the petition as to one or more of them, without prejudice to the effect of the petition as against the other or others of them.

102. Property of partners to be vested in same trustee.—Where one member of a partnership has been adjudicated a bankrupt, any other petition for adjudication against a member of the same partnership shall be filed in or transferred to the court in which the first-mentioned petition is in course of prosecution, and, unless the court otherwise directs, the property of such last-mentioned member shall vest in the trustee appointed in respect of the property of the first-mentioned member of the partnership, and the court may give such directions for amalgamating the proceedings in respect of the properties of the members of the same partnership as it thinks just.

103. Joint creditor may prove for purpose of voting.—If one partner of a firm is adjudged bankrupt, any creditor to whom the bankrupt is indebted jointly with the other partners of the firm, or any of them, may prove his debt for the purpose of voting at any meeting of creditors, and shall be entitled to vote thereat, but shall not receive any dividend out of the separate property of the bankrupt until all the separate creditors have received the full amount of their respective debts.

104. Joint and separate dividends.—Where joint and separate properties are being administered, dividends of the joint and separate properties shall, subject to any order to the contrary that may be made by the court on the application of any person interested, be declared together; and the expenses of and incident to such dividends shall be fairly apportioned by the trustee between the joint and separate properties, regard being had to the work done for and the benefit received by each property.

105. Suits by trustee and bankrupt's partners.—Where a member of a partnership is adjudged bankrupt, the court may authorise the trustee, with consent of the creditors, certified by a special resolution, to commence and prosecute any action or suit in the names of the trustee and of the bankrupt's partner; and any release by such partner of the debt or demand to which the action or suit relates shall be void; but notice of the application for authority to commence the action or suit shall be given to such partner, and he may show cause against it, and on his application the court may, if it thinks fit, direct that he shall receive his proper share of the proceeds of the action or suit, and if he does not claim any benefit therefrom he shall be indemnified against costs in respect thereof as the court directs.

Evidence.

106. Evidence of proceedings at meeting of creditors.—The registrar, or any other person presiding at a meeting of creditors under this act, shall cause minutes to be kept and duly entered in a book of all resolutions and proceedings of such meeting, and any such minute as aforesaid, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such resolutions were passed or proceedings had, shall be received as evidence in all legal proceedings; and, until the contrary is proved, every general meeting of the creditors in respect of the proceedings of which minutes have been so made shall be deemed to have been duly held and convened, and all resolutions passed thereat or proceedings had to have been duly passed and had.

107. Evidence of proceedings in bankruptcy.—Any petition or copy of a petition in bankruptcy, any order or copy of an order made by any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, any certificate or copy of a certificate made by any court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy, any deed or copy of a deed of arrangement in bankruptcy, and any other instrument or copy of an instrument, affidavit, or document made or used in the course of any bankruptcy proceedings, or other proceedings had under this act, may, if any such instrument as aforesaid or copy of an instrument appears to be sealed with the seal of any court having jurisdiction, or purports to be signed by any judge having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act, be receivable in evidence in all legal proceedings whatever.

108. Death of witness.—In case of the death of the bankrupt or his wife, or of a witness whose evidence has been received by any court in any proceeding under this act, the deposition of the person so deceased, purporting to be sealed with the seal of the court, or a copy thereof purporting to be so sealed, shall be admitted as evidence of the matters therein deposed to.

109. Bankruptcy courts to have seals.—Every court having jurisdiction in bankruptcy under this act shall have a seal describing such court in such manner as may be directed by order of the Lord Chancellor, and judicial notice shall be taken of such seal, and of the signature of the judge or registrar of any such court, in all legal proceedings.

Miscellaneous.

110. Expenses of registrar attending meetings, &c.—Where a registrar under the authority of this act attends at any place for the purpose of presiding at a meeting of creditors, or of receiving proofs, or of otherwise acting under this act, his travelling and incidental expenses incurred in so doing, and those of any clerk or officer attending him, shall, after being settled by the court, be paid out of the bankrupt's property, if sufficient, and otherwise shall be deemed part of the expenses of the court.

111. Power of assignee to sue.—Any person to whom anything in action belonging to the bankrupt is assigned in pursuance of this act may bring or defend any action or suit relating to such thing in action in his own name.

112. Saving as to joint contracts.—Where a bankrupt is a contractor in respect of any contract jointly with any other person or persons, such person or persons may sue or be sued in respect of such contract, without the joinder of the bankrupt.

113. Exemption of deeds, &c., from stamp duty.—Every deed, conveyance, assignment, surrender, admission, or other assurance relating solely to freehold, leasehold, copyhold, or customary property, or to any mortgage, charge, or other incumbrance on, or any estate, right, or interest in any real or personal property which is part of the estate of any bankrupt, and which after the execution of such deed, conveyance, assignment, surrender, admission, or other assurance, either at law or in equity, is or remains the estate of the bankrupt or of the trustee under the bankruptcy, and every power of attorney, proxy paper, writ, order, certificate, affidavit, bond, or other instrument or writing relating solely to the property of any bankrupt, or to any proceeding under any bankruptcy, shall be exempt from stamp duty (except in respect of fees under this act).

114. Computation of time.—Where by this act any limited time from or after any date or event is appointed or allowed for the doing of any act or the taking of any proceeding, then in the computation of such limited time the same shall be taken as exclusive of the day of such date or of the happening of such event, and as commencing at the beginning of the next following day; and the act or proceeding shall be done or taken at latest on the last day of such limited time according to such computation, unless such last day is a Sunday, Christmas-day, Good Friday, or Monday or Tuesday in Easter Week, or a day appointed for public fast, humiliation, or thanksgiving, or a day on which, in pursuance of a notification by the Lord Chancellor under this act, the court does not sit, in which case any act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards, not being one of the days in this section specified.

Cap. 71.

Where by this act any act or proceeding is directed to be done or taken on a certain day, then if that day happens to be one of the days in this section specified, such act or proceeding shall be considered as done or taken in due time if it is done or taken on the next day afterwards, not being one of the days in this section specified.

115. Returns by bankruptcy officer.—The registrars and other officers of the courts acting in bankruptcy shall make to the comptroller in bankruptcy such returns of the business of their respective courts and offices, at such times and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the rules of court, and from such returns the comptroller shall, in manner prescribed by the rules of court, frame books (which shall be, under the regulations of the rules of court, open for public information and searches), and also a general annual report to the Lord Chancellor, judicial and financial, respecting all matters within this act, which report shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament.

116. Forfeiture of dividends after five years' non-claim.—Where any dividends remain unclaimed for five years then and in every such case the same shall be deemed vested in the Crown, and shall be disposed of as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury direct; provided, that at any time after such vesting the Lord Chancellor or any court authorised by him may, by reason of the disability or absence beyond seas of the person entitled to the sum so vested, or for any other reason appearing to him sufficient, direct that the said sum shall be repaid out of money provided by Parliament.

117. Removal of bankrupt from trusteeship.—Where a bankrupt is a trustee within "The Trustee Act, 1850," section thirty-two of that act shall have effect so as to authorise the court to appoint a new trustee in substitution for the bankrupt (whether voluntarily resigning or not), if it appears to the court expedient to do so, and all provisions of that act, and of any other act relative thereto, shall have effect accordingly.

118. Saving as to debts contracted prior to August, 1861.—No person, not being a trader, shall be adjudged a bankrupt in respect of a debt contracted before the date of the passing of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1861."

119. Construction of acts mentioning commission of bankruptcy, &c.—Where in any act of Parliament, instrument, or proceeding passed, executed, or taken before the commencement of this act mention is made of a commission of bankruptcy or fiat in bankruptcy, the same shall be construed, with reference to the proceedings under a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, as if a commission of or a fiat in bankruptcy had been actually issued at the time of the presentation of such petition.

PART V.

PERSONS HAVING PRIVILEGE OF PARLIAMENT.

120. Privilege of Parliament not to prevent adjudication in bankruptcy.—If a person having privilege of Parliament commits an act of bankruptcy he may be dealt with under this act in like manner as if he had not such privilege.

121. Vacating of seat in House of Commons.—If a person, being a member of the Commons House of Parliament, is adjudged bankrupt, he shall be and remain during one year from the date of the order of adjudication incapable of sitting and voting in that House, unless within that time either the order is annulled or the creditors who prove debts under the bankruptcy are fully paid or satisfied.

Provided that such debts (if any) as are disputed by the bankrupt shall be considered, for the purpose of this section, as paid or satisfied if within the time aforesaid he enters into a bond, in such sum and with such sureties as the court approves, to pay the amount to be recovered in any proceeding for the recovery of or concerning such debts, together with any costs to be given in such proceedings.

122. Certificate of bankruptcy to be given by the court to the Speaker.—If within the time aforesaid the order of adjudication is not annulled, and the debts of the bankrupt are not fully paid or satisfied as aforesaid, then the court shall, immediately after the expiration of that time, certify the same to the Speaker of the House of Commons, and thereupon the seat of such member shall be vacant.

123. Speaker to issue new writ.—Where the seat of a member so becomes vacant the Speaker during a recess of the House, whether by prorogation or by adjournment, shall forthwith, after receiving such certificate, cause notice thereof to be published in the London Gazette; and after the expiration of six days after such publication shall (unless the House has met before that day, or will meet on the day of the issue), issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new writ for electing another member in the room of the member whose seat has so become vacant.

124. Provisions of 24 Geo. 3, sess. 2, c. 26, extended to case of bankruptcy.—The powers of the act of the twenty-fourth year of the reign of King George the Third, chapter twenty-six, "to repeal so much of two Acts made in the Tenth and Fifteenth Years of the Reign of His present Majesty as authorises the Speaker of the House of Commons to issue his Warrant to the Clerk of the Crown for making out Writs for the Election of Members to serve in Parliament in the manner therein mentioned; and for substituting other Provisions for the like Purposes" so far as such powers enable the Speaker to nominate and appoint other persons, being members of the House of Commons, to issue warrants for the making out of new writs during the vacancy of the office of Speaker, or during his absence out of the realm, shall extend to enable him to make the like nomination and appointment for issuing warrants, under the like circumstances and conditions, for the election of a member in the room of any bankrupt member whose seat becomes vacant under this act.

PART VI.

LIQUIDATION BY ARRANGEMENT.

Regulations.

125. Regulations as to liquidation by arrangement.—The following regulations shall be made with respect to the liquidation by arrangement of the affairs of the debtor:

- (1.) A debtor unable to pay his debts may summon a general meeting of his creditors, and such meeting may, by a special resolution as defined by this act, declare that the affairs of the debtor are to be liquidated by arrangement and not in bankruptcy, and may at that or some subsequent meeting, held at an interval of not more than a week, appoint a trustee, with or without a committee of inspection.
- (2.) All the provisions of this act relating to a first meeting of creditors, and to subsequent meetings of creditors in the case of a bankruptcy, including the description of creditors entitled to vote at such meetings, and the debts in respect of which they are entitled to vote, shall apply respectively to the first meeting of creditors, and to subsequent meetings of creditors, for the purposes of this section, subject to the following modifications:
 - (a.) That every such meeting shall be presided over by such chairman as the meeting may elect; and
 - (b.) That no creditor shall be entitled to vote until he has proved by a statutory declaration a debt provable in bankruptcy to be due to him, and the amount of such debt, with any prescribed particulars; and any person wilfully making a false declaration in relation to such debt shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.
- (3.) The debtor, unless prevented by sickness or other cause satisfactory to such meeting, shall be present at the meeting at which the special resolution is passed, and shall answer any inquiries made of him, and he, or if he is so prevented from being at such meeting some one on his behalf, shall produce to the meeting a statement showing the whole of his assets and debts, and the names and addresses of the creditors to whom his debts are due.
- (4.) The special resolution, together with the statement of the assets and debts of the debtor, and the name of the trustee appointed, and of the members, if any, of the committee of inspection, shall be presented to the registrar, and it shall be his duty to inquire whether such resolution has been passed in manner directed by this section, but if satisfied that it was so passed, and that a trustee has been appointed with or without a committee of inspection, he shall forthwith register the resolution, and the statement of the assets and debts of the debtor, and such resolution and statement shall be open for inspection on the prescribed conditions, and the liquidation by arrangement shall be deemed to have commenced as from the date of the appointment of the trustee.
- (5.) All such property of the debtor as would, if he were made bankrupt, be divisible amongst his creditors shall, from and after the date of the appointment of a trustee, vest in such trustee under a liquidation by arrangement, and be divisible amongst the creditors, and all such settlements, conveyances, transfers, charges, payments, obligations, and proceedings as would be void against the trustee in the case of a bankruptcy shall be void against the trustee in the case of liquidation by arrangement.
- (6.) The certificate of the registrar in respect of the appointment of any trustee in the case of a liquidation by arrangement shall be of the same effect as a certificate of the court to the like effect in the case of a bankruptcy.
- (7.) The trustee under a liquidation shall have the same powers, and perform the same duties, as a trustee under a bankruptcy, and the property of the debtor shall be distributed in the same manner as in a bankruptcy; and with the modification hereinafter mentioned all the provisions of this act shall, so far as the same are applicable, apply to the case of a liquidation by arrangement in the same manner as if the word "bankrupt" included a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation, and the word "bankruptcy" included liquidation by arrangement; and in construing such provisions the appointment of a trustee under a liquidation shall, according to circumstances, be deemed to be equivalent to and a substitute for the representation of a petition in bankruptcy, or the service of such petition or an order of adjudication in bankruptcy.
- (8.) The creditors at their first or any general meeting may prescribe the bank into which the trustee is to pay any moneys received by him, and the sum which he may retain in his hands.
- (9.) The provisions of this act with respect to the close of the bankruptcy discharge of a bankrupt, to the release of the trustee, and to the audit of accounts by the comptroller shall not apply in the case of a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation by arrangement; but the close of the liquidation may be fixed, and the discharge of the debtor and the release of the trustee may be granted by a special resolution of the creditors in general meeting, and the accounts may be audited in pursuance of such resolution, at such time and in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as the creditors think fit.

Cap. 71.

Cap. 71.

- (10.) The trustee shall report to the registrar the discharge of the debtor, and a certificate of such discharge given by the registrar shall have the same effect as an order of discharge given to a bankrupt under this act.
- (11.) Rules of court may be made in relation to proceedings on the occasion of liquidation by arrangement in the same manner and to the same extent and of the same authority as in respect of proceedings in bankruptcy.
- (12.) If it appear to the court on satisfactory evidence that the liquidation by arrangement cannot, in consequence of legal difficulties, or of there being no trustee for the time being, or for any sufficient cause, proceed without injustice or undue delay to the creditors or to the debtor, the court may adjudge the debtor a bankrupt, and proceedings may be had accordingly.
- (13.) Where no committee of inspection is appointed the trustee may act on his own discretion in cases where he would otherwise have been bound to refer to such committee.
- (14.) In calculating a majority on a special resolution for the purposes of this section, creditors whose debts amount to sums not exceeding ten pounds shall be reckoned in the majority in value, but not in the majority in number.

PART VII.

COMPOSITION WITH CREDITORS.

Regulations.

126. Regulations as to composition by creditors.—The creditors of a debtor unable to pay his debts may, without any proceedings in bankruptcy, by an extraordinary resolution, resolve that a composition shall be accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to them from the debtor.

An extraordinary resolution of creditors shall be a resolution which has been passed by a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors of the debtor, assembled at a general meeting to be held in the manner prescribed, of which notice has been given in the prescribed manner, and has been confirmed by a majority in number and value of the creditors assembled at a subsequent general meeting, of which notice has been given in the prescribed manner, and held at an interval of not less than seven days nor more than fourteen days from the date of the meeting at which such resolution was first passed.

In calculating a majority for the purposes of a composition under this section, creditors whose debts amount to sums not exceeding ten pounds shall be reckoned in the majority in value, but not in the majority in number, and the value of the debts of secured creditors shall, as nearly as circumstances admit, be estimated in the same way, and the same description of creditors shall be entitled to vote at such general meetings as in bankruptcy.

The debtor, unless prevented by sickness or other cause satisfactory to such meetings, shall be present at both the meetings at which the extraordinary resolution is passed, and shall answer any inquiries made of him, and he, or if he is so prevented from being at such meetings some one on his behalf, shall produce to the meetings a statement showing the whole of his assets and debts, and the names and addresses of the creditors to whom such debts respectively are due.

The extraordinary resolution, together with the statement of the debtor as to his assets and debts, shall be presented to the registrar, and it shall be his duty to inquire whether such resolution has been passed in manner directed by this section, and if satisfied that it has been so passed he shall forthwith register the resolution and statement of assets and debts, but until such registration has taken place such resolution shall be of no validity; and any creditor of the debtor may inspect such statement at prescribed times, and on payment of such fee, if any, as may be prescribed.

The creditors may, by an extraordinary resolution, add to or vary the provisions of any composition previously accepted by them, without prejudice to any persons taking interests under such provisions who do not assent to such addition or variation; and any such extraordinary resolution shall be presented to the registrar in the same manner and with the same consequences as the extraordinary resolution by which the composition was accepted in the first instance.

The provisions of a composition accepted by an extraordinary resolution in pursuance of this section shall be binding on all the creditors whose names and addresses, and the amount of the debts due to whom, are shown in the statement of the debtor, produced to the meetings at which the resolution has passed, but shall not affect or prejudice the rights of any other creditors.

Where a debt arises on a bill of exchange or promissory note, if the debtor is ignorant of the holder of any such bill of exchange or promissory note, he shall be required to state the amount of such bill or note, the date on which it falls due, the name of the acceptor or person to whom it is payable, and any other particulars within his knowledge respecting the same, and the insertion of such particulars shall be deemed a sufficient description of the creditor of the debtor in respect of such debt, and any mistake made inadvertently by a debtor in the statement of his debts may be corrected after the prescribed notice has been given, with the consent of a general meeting of his creditors.

The provisions of any composition made in pursuance of this section may be enforced by the court on a motion made in a summary manner by any person interested, and any disobedience of the order of the court made on such motion shall be deemed to be a contempt of court.

Rules of court may be made in relation to proceedings on the occasion of the acceptance of a composition by an extraordinary resolution of creditors in the same manner and to the same extent and of the same authority as in respect of proceedings in bankruptcy.

If it appears to the court on satisfactory evidence that a composition under this section cannot, in consequence of legal difficulties, or for any sufficient cause proceed without injustice or undue delay to the creditors or to the debtor, the court may adjudge the debtor a bankrupt, and proceedings may be had accordingly.

127. Registration of resolutions of creditors conclusive in certain cases.—The registration by the registrar of a special resolution of the creditors on the occasion of a liquidation by arrangement under Part VI. of this act, or of an extraordinary resolution of the creditors on the occasion of a composition under the Seventh Part of this act, shall, in the absence of fraud, be conclusive evidence that such resolutions respectively were duly passed and all the requisitions of this act in respect of such resolutions complied with.

PART VII. TEMPORARY PROVISIONS.

Bankruptcy Courts.

128. Commissioners of London Bankruptcy Court to cease to hold offices.—Such one of the present commissioners of the London Bankruptcy Court as may be chosen by Her Majesty shall be the first Chief Judge in the London Bankruptcy Court as constituted under this act, and shall, as to tenure of office, salary, pension, and all other privileges except his title, continue in the same position in all respects as if his office had not been abolished by this act; but, save as aforesaid, from and after the commencement of this act the present commissioners of the London Bankruptcy Court shall cease to hold their offices.

129. Transfer of officers of existing court to new Court of Bankruptcy.—The chief registrar, registrars, accountant in bankruptcy, taxing masters, official assignees, messengers, and all other officers holding offices or employed in the existing London Bankruptcy Court, herein called the Old London Bankruptcy, at the commencement of this act, shall, unless the Lord Chancellor otherwise directs, be attached to the London Bankruptcy Court as constituted under this act, herein called the New London Bankruptcy Court. The officers so attached shall have the same relative rank, hold their offices by the same tenure and upon the same terms and conditions, and receive the same salaries as heretofore. The Lord Chancellor may by order make provision for winding-up such portion of the business pending in the said old Bankruptcy Court as cannot conveniently be transferred to the new Bankruptcy Court, and for transferring to such last-mentioned court any business capable of being conveniently transferred, and every officer attached to such last-mentioned court shall conform to any order so made by the Lord Chancellor. The Lord Chancellor may by order distribute the business to be performed in the said new Bankruptcy Court amongst the several officers attached thereto in such manner as he may think just, and such officers shall perform such duties in relation to such business as may be directed by the Lord Chancellor, with this qualification, that the duties required to be performed by them shall be the same or duties analogous to those which they have hitherto performed in the old Bankruptcy Court. The Lord Chancellor may at any time by order release from the performance of any duties in the new Bankruptcy Court any officer of the old Bankruptcy Court whose services he may deem unnecessary, and the office held by such person shall be deemed to be abolished unless it be an office required to be continued in pursuance of the provisions of this act relating to the constitution of the new Bankruptcy Court. Any person so released shall, whether his office be altogether abolished or not, be entitled to compensation in the same manner in all respects as if his office had been abolished.

130. Abolition of country district courts of bankruptcy.—From and after the commencement of this act the country district courts of bankruptcy shall be abolished, and the commissioners, registrars, official assignees, messengers, ushers, clerks, and officers of the said courts respectively shall cease to hold their offices.

Such part of the business pending in any country district court of bankruptcy as the Lord Chancellor thinks fit shall be disposed of by the registrar of that court (who shall for that purpose continue to have and discharge all his powers and authorities, rights and duties), and the residue of that business shall be transferred to the London Bankruptcy Court, or to such County Court or County Courts as the Lord Chancellor, by order before or after its abolition, thinks fit to direct; but, subject as aforesaid, the office of any registrar in such country district court shall be abolished.

All books, papers, documents, and money in the custody or control of any such commissioners, registrars, official assignees, messengers, ushers, clerks, and officers, as such, shall be transferred to such courts or persons as the Lord Chancellor may direct. The Lord Chancellor shall also by order declare the person or persons in whom any property vested in any official assignee or other officer as such of any county district court hereby abolished is to vest, and such property shall vest accordingly.

Cap. 71.

131. Compensation to officers.—The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may, on the petition of any person whose office or employment is abolished by or under this act, on the commencement of this act or on any other event, inquire whether any, and, if any, what compensation ought to be made to the petitioner, regard being had to the conditions on which his appointment was made, the nature of his office or employment and the duration of his service; and if they think that his claim to compensation is established, may award to him, out of moneys to be provided by Parliament, such compensation, by annuity or otherwise, as under the circumstances of the case they think just and reasonable; provided that when any such person held his office during good behaviour, or during good behaviour subject only to removal by the Lord Chancellor by order, for some sufficient reason to be stated in such order, the Lord Chancellor may, with the approval of the Commissioners of the Treasury, award under special circumstances an amount equal to the salary of any such person; and in every other case the sum awarded shall not be less than two-thirds of the salary of such person.

132. Persons to be selected whose office is abolished by act.—Every person appointed to any office or employment created by this act shall in the first instance be selected from the persons whose office or employment is abolished by this act, unless, in the opinion of the Lord Chancellor, none of the last-mentioned persons are fit for such office or employment.

133. Subsequent appointment to be notified to the Treasury.—When any subsequent vacancy occurs in any office or employment created by this act, and such vacancy is not filled up by the appointment of a person in the receipt of compensation under this act, no permanent appointment shall be made until notice of the vacancy has been given to the Treasury, and until the Lord Chancellor has determined that no person in receipt of compensation under this act is fit for such office or employment.

134. Nominations to be by Lord Chancellor.—The Lord Chancellor may nominate or appoint any commissioner whose office has been abolished under this act to some other judicial office of equal or greater salary for which he may be deemed fit by the Lord Chancellor, and to which he is entitled to nominate or appoint, and may nominate or appoint any other person whose office or employment has been abolished by this act, whom he may deem fit to fill a vacancy in any office or employment created by this act, of equal or greater salary, to which he is entitled to nominate or appoint, provided that the person appointed be in the receipt of compensation or superannuation allowance equal to the amount of his salary at the time of the abolition of his office; and if the commissioner or other person so nominated or appointed declines to accept such office or employment, or neglects to execute the duties thereof satisfactorily, being in a competent state of health, he shall forfeit his right to the compensation or superannuation allowance which may have been granted to him, or which he might otherwise be entitled to receive, unless he shall satisfy the Lord Chancellor that the office is one not suitable to his position, regard being had to his former office.

135. Acceptance of public employment by annuitants.—If any person to whom a compensation annuity is granted under this act accepts any public employment, he shall, during the continuance of that employment, receive only so much (if any) of that annuity as, with the remuneration of that employment, will amount to a sum not exceeding the salary or emoluments in respect of the loss whereof the annuity was awarded, and if the remuneration of that employment is equal to or greater than such salary or emoluments, the annuity shall be suspended so long as he received that remuneration.

136. Superannuation of registrars, &c.—The registrars, clerks, and other persons holding their offices at the passing of this act who may be continued in their offices, shall, on their retirement therefrom, be allowed such superannuation as they would have been entitled to receive if this act had not been passed, and they had continued in their offices under the existing acts; and any other registrar, officer, or person appointed to any office under this act may be allowed superannuation in pursuance of the provisions of "The Superannuation Act of 1859."

CRIMINAL LUNATICS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 78.

An Act to amend the Law relating to Criminal Lunatics.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas by the sixth section of "The Criminal Lunatics Act, 1867," it is enacted, "that where the term of punishment awarded to any criminal lunatic confined in any asylum or other place of confinement for criminal lunatics expires before such evidence of his sanity has been given as justifies his being discharged, such consequences shall ensue as are thereafter mentioned:" And whereas doubts are entertained whether such section extends to criminal lunatics whose terms of punishment have expired previously to the passing of the said act, and it is expedient to remove such doubts:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Criminal Lunatics Act, 1869."

Cap. 71.

Cap. 78.

2. Application of sect. 6 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 12.—It is hereby declared that the sixth section of "The Criminal Lunatics Act, 1867," does apply and shall be deemed to have applied from the date of the passing thereof to criminal lunatics whose terms of punishment expired before the date of the passing of such act in the same manner, so far as circumstances admit, as if their terms of punishment had expired subsequently to the passing of such act, and all orders made and acts done previously to the passing of this act in respect of or to criminal lunatics whose terms of punishment expired before the passing of the said "Criminal Lunatics Act, 1867," shall be valid accordingly; but no parish or place upon which any order may have been or shall be made for, or which shall be otherwise chargeable with, the maintenance of any criminal lunatic under the sixth section of the said act shall be liable to make good or refund any sum of money which may have been theretofore expended by any other parish or place on account of the maintenance of such lunatic.

THE VOLUNTEER ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 81.

Cap. 81.

An Act to amend "The Volunteer Act, 1863."—[9th August, 1869.]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Volunteer Act, 1869."

2. This act to be construed with 26 & 27 Vict. c. 65.—This act shall be construed as one with "The Volunteer Act," 1863, in this act referred to as the principal act, and that act and this act may be cited together as "The Volunteer Acts, 1863 and 1869."

3. Remedy for non-delivery of arms, &c., on demand.—Where any person neglects or refuses, on demand made as hereinafter mentioned, to deliver up any property (whether arms, clothing, appointments, ammunition, or public stores,) which is public property, or the property of a volunteer corps or administrative regiment, and has been issued to such person or is in his possession or keeping as an officer or volunteer, any justice of the peace may, upon reasonable ground being shown for a suspicion that the property is to be found on any premises, issue a warrant under his hand empowering the person therein named to enter upon such premises and search for the property, and the person so empowered may enter and search accordingly, and shall seize such property, if found, and remove the same with all convenient speed to such place as may be directed by the Secretary of State, person, officer, or adjutant who made the demand.

Notwithstanding any such seizure and removal, the same penalty may be enforced against any person, and the value of any such property may be recovered from the person neglecting or refusing as aforesaid, in the same manner as it might have been under the principal act if this act had not passed.

The jurisdiction under this section may be exercised by any sheriff or magistrate who under the principal act has jurisdiction with respect to the recovery of a penalty.

4. Mode of making demand.—A demand may be made for the purposes of this act by the following persons, viz.:—

- (1.) In any case by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State or any person authorised in writing by him.
- (2.) In the case of any volunteer and any officer of inferior rank to the person making the demand, by the commanding officer or adjutant of the volunteer corps or administrative regiment to which such property belongs, or to which such volunteer or officer belongs.

The demand may be made by the delivery of a written notice to the person upon whom the demand is made, or by leaving the same at his usual or last known place of abode, or, if no such abode is known, by affixing the same at the orderly room of the corps or regiment to which he belongs or belonged, or at the place where notices relating to such corps or regiment are usually affixed.

5. Wrongful pawning of arms, &c., by volunteers.—Section twenty-nine of the principal act, which relates to the wrongful buying and selling of any property (whether arms, clothing, appointments, ammunition, or public stores,) which is public property or the property of a corps or administrative regiment shall extend to the pawning and taking in pawn of such property; and the said section shall be construed as if the words "buy," "sell," and "selling" included take in pawn, and pawning respectively.

Cap. 78.

6. Appearance of commanding officer by adjutant, &c.—The commanding officer of any corps or administrative regiment may appear in any County Court or before any justice, sheriff, or magistrate, by the adjutant or sergeant-major of such corps or regiment, or any member of the staff of the corps or regiment authorised in writing under the hand of such commanding officer.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 82.

An Act to amend the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855.—
[9th August, 1869.]

BANKRUPTCY REPEAL AND INSOLVENT COURT ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 83.

An Act to provide for the Winding-up of the Business of the late Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England, and to repeal Enactments relating to Insolvency, Bankruptcy, Imprisonment for Debt, and Matters connected therewith.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to provide for the winding-up of the business of the late court for the relief of insolvent debtors in England:

And whereas the enactments described in the schedule to this act relate to insolvency or bankruptcy, or imprisonment for debt, or to matters connected therewith, and the same either have ceased to be in force, or on the commencement of divers acts of the present session will cease to be in force, and it is therefore expedient that the same be expressly repealed:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Bankruptcy Repeal and Insolvent Court Act, 1869."

2. Commencement of act.—This act shall not come into operation until the day on which "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, comes into operation, which day is hereinafter referred to as the commencement of this act.

PART I.

Temporary Provisions respecting Insolvent Debtors.

3. Construction of part of act.—Words and expressions defined or explained in "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," shall have the same meaning in this part of this act.

4. Jurisdiction of Insolvent Debtors Court and of County Courts.—The Court of Bankruptcy in London shall have all the jurisdiction, powers, and authorities possessed at the commencement of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1861," by the late Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England (in this part of this act called the late Insolvent Debtors Court), in relation to all matters then pending in that court, and not completed at the commencement of this act, and all matters at the commencement of this act pending in that court or in the County Courts under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors shall (subject to the express provisions of this part of this act) be continued and completed therein as if this act had not been passed.

5. General rules to be made by court.—Rules of court may be made in manner provided by "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," for the effectual execution of this part of this act and of the objects thereof, and the regulation of the practice and procedure in proceedings thereunder, and the provisions of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," with respect to the making of rules of court shall apply accordingly.

Until rules have been made in pursuance of this section, and so far as such rules do not extend, the principles, practice, and rules on which courts having jurisdiction in insolvency have heretofore acted in dealing with insolvency proceedings shall be observed.

6. Delegation of authority by court.—The judge of any court exercising jurisdiction under this part of this act may delegate to the registrar or to any other officer of his court such of the powers vested in him under this part of this act as are allowed by the rules of court to be so delegated.

7. Saving for liability under Insolvent Debtors Acts.—Where a bankrupt has before adjudication of bankruptcy taken the benefit of any act for the relief of insolvent debtors, nothing in "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," shall interfere with the operation of the act of which he so took the benefit, in respect of the liability of property acquired after his discharge under that act, if and so far as any such liability would have existed if "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," had not been passed.

8. Provision for duties of provisional assignee.—The person at the passing of this act holding the office of provisional and official assignee of the estates and effects of insolvent debtors shall be deemed to have been duly appointed, and shall (subject to the provisions of this act) continue, on the same terms on which he then holds that office, to perform the duties imposed on him by or under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1861," or any other act. If a vacancy occurs in that office at any time after the passing of this act, the Lord Chancellor may appoint a fit person to perform the remaining duties thereof, who shall receive such remuneration as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, from time to time directs, and the person so appointed shall have all the powers and authorities of the person who is at the passing of this act the provisional and official assignee; and all estates, rights, and effects vested at the time of the vacancy in the provisional and official assignee shall, by virtue of such appointment, become vested in the person so appointed, and the like appointment on a vacancy shall be made and the like vesting shall have effect from time to time as occasion requires.

9. Receiver of Insolvent Debtors Court.—The provisional and official assignee of the estates and effects of insolvent debtors and the person for the time being appointed to perform the remaining duties of that office shall also be styled the receiver of the late Insolvent Debtors Court, and as such he shall act in such manner in relation to the receipt and custody of money paid to him or into court in respect of the estates of insolvent debtors, and to the payment thereof out of court, and give such security, as may be from time to time prescribed by the rules of court.

The accounts of the provisional and official assignee and receiver may be audited by such person and in such manner and at such times as may be prescribed by the rules of court.

10. Clerks and officers of Insolvent Debtors Court.—The taxing master, clerks, and persons (other than the provisional and official assignee) at the commencement of this act discharging duties connected with the late Insolvent Debtors Court shall continue to discharge the same duties as at the commencement of this act; and every such clerk and person appointed before the commencement of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1861," shall hold his appointment during good behaviour, but may be removed by the Lord Chancellor, by order, for some sufficient reason therein stated. If a vacancy happens in the place of any clerk or person to whom this section relates, the Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, with the concurrence of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury, employ a fit person to discharge the duties of that place; and in the event of the duties of any such first-named clerk or person ceasing, he shall, if the Lord Chancellor thinks fit, be appointed to discharge similar duties in the Court of Bankruptcy in London in case his services are required in that behalf, and if not so appointed his office shall be abolished, and he shall be awarded the same compensation as if his office had been abolished by "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869."

11. Salary of provisional assignee.—The person who is at the passing of this act the provisional and official assignee shall as long as he remains in office receive the same salary as at the commencement of this act.

12. Salaries of clerks and officers of court.—The clerks and persons (other than the provisional and official assignee) who under this act discharge duties connected with the late Insolvent Debtors Court shall as long as they discharge such duties continue to receive the same salaries as at the commencement of this act.

13. Saving for right to superannuation allowance, &c.—Nothing in "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," or this act shall deprive any person holding at the commencement of this act any office or place in the late Insolvent Debtors Court of any benefit to which at or after the commencement of this act he is or may become entitled by virtue of any act relating to superannuation allowances; and the service of any such person in the Court of Bankruptcy in London shall, in relation to superannuation allowance, retiring pension, and compensation annuity on abolition of office, be equivalent to service in the late Insolvent Debtors Court; and nothing in this part of this act shall prevent any person from being deemed an officer of the Court of Bankruptcy who would have been deemed such if this part of this act had not been enacted.

14. Winding-up of insolvency business.—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.—For the purpose of winding-up and terminating as quickly as possible all matters at the commencement of this act pending in the late Insolvent Debtors Court and in County Courts under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors, the judges of the courts in which the same are pending shall from time to time order the provisional and official assignee of the estates and effects of insolvent debtors or the person for the time being appointed to perform the remaining duties of that office, to institute and carry on such proceedings, either at law or in equity, as the judges direct for compelling creditors, assignees, and others to account for and pay to the receiver of the late Insolvent Debtors Court assets belonging to the estates of insolvent debtors, and those judges shall have for that purpose all such powers and authorities as were vested in the late Insolvent Debtors Court in cases where the court was dissatisfied with the account of an assignee.

15. Termination of insolvency cases.—For the purpose of winding-up and terminating all matters which at the commencement of this act may be pending in the late Insolvent Debtors Court and in County Courts under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors, the following provision shall have effect; namely

- (1.) Every insolvency shall at the expiration of twelve months from the commencement of this act or at the expiration of twenty years from the date of the filing of the petition (whichever last happens) be closed:
- (2.) Before the expiration of the said twelve months or twenty years, as the case may be, any assignee, creditor, or other person interested in an insolvency may apply in the prescribed manner to the court in which it is pending to have the close of such insolvency postponed, and the judge of such court, on sufficient cause being shown for the postponement, may, subject to the rules of court, postpone such close for such period and on such terms and conditions (if any) as he thinks just:

(3.) If the close is postponed the same proceedings may be had before the expiration of the period of postponement as is provided by this section before the expiration of the said twenty years :

(4.) If sufficient cause for postponement is not shown before the expiration of the said twelve months, or twenty years, or the period of postponement (as the case may be), or of such further period as may, subject to the rules of court, be allowed for an application by the court in which the case is pending, the insolvency shall at the expiration of the said times be ipso facto closed, and thereupon the insolvent or the heirs, devisees, or personal representatives of the insolvent (if he is dead) shall be in the same position and have the same rights in all respects as if the insolvent had been bankrupt, and had at the date of the closing obtained his discharge under "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869 :"

(5.) The term insolvency in this section includes any proceeding taken to obtain protection under the act of the session of the fifth and sixth years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter one hundred and sixteen.

16. Authorities to be cumulative.—The powers and authorities originally conferred by this part of this act on the Court of Bankruptcy in London and the County Courts shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in abridgment of or substitution for the powers and authorities vested in them under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors.

17. Account of Insolvent Debtors Court.—The receiver of the late Insolvent Debtors Court shall keep an account to be intitled "The Account of the late Insolvent Debtors Court," and there shall be transferred to that account the account kept at the passing of this act by the accountant in bankruptcy, intituled the purposes of the twenty-sixth section of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1861," and so much of the accounts kept by the said accountant, intituled respectively the general account of bankrupts' estates and the unclaimed dividend account, as relates to insolvent debtors, and so much of the cash and securities left standing in the name of the said accountant under the provisions of any act passed in the present session respecting the funds of the Court of Bankruptcy as represents part of the sums standing to the credit of the accounts so transferred shall be transferred into the name of the receiver of the late Insolvent Debtors Court to the account of the late Insolvent Debtors Court, and all the provisions of any such act relating to the accountant in bankruptcy shall extend, mutatis mutandis, to the receiver of the late Insolvent Debtors Court.

18. Application of Insolvent Debtors Court account.—The sums for the time being standing to the account of the late Insolvent Debtors Court shall be subject to the orders of the Court of Bankruptcy in London for payment of any dividend, or distribution of any money, in the matter to which any part thereof originally belonged, and for payment of any money paid into the late Insolvent Debtors Court and appearing to be unaccounted for or not duly appropriated, and for indemnifying every existing and past provisional and official assignee, and every person appointed to perform the remaining duties of the office of provisional and official assignee, and their respective estates, against costs and expenses incurred or to be incurred in any action, suit, or proceeding.

19. Vesting of dividends after six years' non-claim.—All dividends declared in any court acting under the acts relating to bankruptcy or the relief of insolvent debtors which remain unclaimed for five years after the commencement of this act, if declared before that commencement, and for five years after the declaration of the dividend if declared after the commencement of this act, and all undivided surpluses of estates administered under the jurisdiction of such court which remain undivided for five years after the declaration of a final dividend in the case of bankruptcy, or for five years after the close of an insolvency under this act, shall be deemed vested in the Crown, and shall be disposed of as the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury direct; provided that at any time after such vesting the Lord Chancellor may, if he thinks fit, by reason of the disability or absence beyond seas of the person entitled to the sum so vested, or for any other reason appearing to him sufficient, direct that the sum so vested shall be repaid out of moneys provided by Parliament, and shall be distributed as it would have been if there had been no such vesting.

REPEAL.

20. Enactments described in schedule repealed.—The enactments described in the schedule to this act are hereby repealed; but this repeal shall not affect the past operation of any such enactment, or revive any court, office, jurisdiction, authority, or thing abolished by any such enactment, or affect the validity or invalidity of anything done or suffered before the commencement of this act, or any right, title, obligation, or liability accrued or restriction imposed before the commencement of this act, by or under any such enactment, or affect any principle or rule of law derived from any enactment contained in the first and secondly mentioned acts in the schedule to this act; nor shall this repeal interfere with the prosecution or affect the course of any legal proceeding pending in bankruptcy or otherwise under any such enactment before the commencement of this act; but subject to the provisions of "The Bankruptcy Act, 1869," and "The Debtors Act, 1869," such proceedings shall be prosecuted as if this act had not passed; nor shall this repeal interfere with the institution or prosecution of any proceeding stamps or otherwise) and account for and pay over such fee in such manner as may be directed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

6. Persons hereafter appointed not to be entitled to compensation.—Every person who is appointed after the passing of this act to be clerk of assize shall hold his office subject to such provisions and regulations as may thereafter be enacted by Parliament respecting the same, and shall not be entitled to any compensation in respect of the emoluments of his office in case any alteration is made in the duties thereof, or the same is abolished by authority of Parliament.

7. Removal of person employed by clerk of assize.—Any person employed by any clerk of assize and paid any salary or allowance out of moneys provided by Parliament shall not be removed from his office or employment without the sanction of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury.

8. Definition of clerk of assize.—In this act the term "clerk of assize" includes Clerk of the Crown and associate on circuit, and any other office the duties of which are at the passing of this act or may hereafter be performed by the clerk of assize.

PART II.

FEES ON ORDERS UNDER 30 & 31 VICT. c. 35, s. 5.

9. Construction of part of act.—This part of this act shall be construed as one with the recited act of the thirtieth and thirty-first years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter thirty-five, which may be cited as "The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867."

10. Amendment of sect. 5 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, as to fees.—Where the officer of the court who in pursuance of section five of "The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867," makes out an order for the payment of expenses and compensation to witnesses is paid by salary, or is for the time being allowed under the table of fees relating to his office to take one fee only of fixed amount in respect of his several duties relating to the prosecution of an offender, such officer shall make out and deliver such order without taking any fee for the same, and the said section shall be construed as if all mention of the sum or fee of sixpence were omitted therefrom.

11. Fees under sect. 5 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, to be included in the account of the clerk of the peace.—Where the fee of sixpence is, in pursuance of section five of "The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1867," as amended by this act, taken by a clerk of the peace or other officer, the amount of such fees received by him during any year after the passing of this act shall be included in the total amount of fees in criminal prosecutions received by him, which is to be ascertained under section eighteen of the act of the session of the eighteenth and nineteenth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and twenty-six, "for diminishing Expense and Delay in the Administration of Criminal Justice in certain Cases," and shall be included in every return or account of fees made or rendered by such clerk of the peace or other officer.

Cap. 91.

An Act for amending the Law relating to the Salaries, Expenses and Funds of Courts of Law in England.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient that the expenditure for the courts of justice should be (so far as may be) defrayed out of moneys to be provided for the purpose of Parliament, or out of the Consolidated Fund:

And whereas in the second part of the first and second schedules to this act there are shown the stock and cash which on the several days mentioned in those schedules belonged to the Courts of Chancery and Bankruptcy (as distinguished from the stock securities and cash which are the property of the suitors therein):

And whereas the charges on such stock and cash are shown in the third and fourth schedules to this Act:

And whereas it is expedient that on the charges thereon being transferred to the Consolidated Fund or moneys provided by Parliament, the said stock and cash should be transferred to the public:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Courts Justice (Salaries and Funds) Act, 1869."

2. Commencement of act.—This act shall not come into operation until the first day of October one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, which date is hereinafter referred to as the commencement of this act.

CLERKS OF ASSIZE ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 89.

Cap. 89.

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Office of Clerk of Assize and Offices united thereto, and to certain Fees upon Orders for Payment of Witnesses in Criminal Proceedings.—[9th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to the office of clerk of assize and offices united thereto, and to remove doubts which have arisen respecting the taking of certain fees in pursuance of section five of the act of the session of the thirtieth and thirty-first years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter thirty-five, "to remove some Defects in the Administration of the Criminal Law:"

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Clerks of Assize, &c., Act, 1869."

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

OFFICE OF CLERK OF ASSIZE.

3. Qualification for clerk of assize.—After the passing of this act a person shall not be appointed to be clerk of assize unless he has during a period of not less than three years been either.

(1.) A barrister-at-law in actual practice, or

(2.) A special pleader or conveyancer in actual practice, or

(3.) An attorney of one of the Superior Courts of law at Westminster in actual practice, or

(4.) A subordinate officer of a clerk of assize on circuit; and the appointment of any person to be clerk of assize who is not qualified as provided by this section shall be void, and another duly qualified person may be appointed in his place as if he were naturally dead.

4. Revision of salary of clerk of assize.—Whenever any vacancy takes place in the office of clerk of assize the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may revise the salary attached to such office and fix another salary in lieu of the former salary, having regard to the nature of the duties and responsibility of such office.

5. Taking of fees by clerks of assize.—A clerk of assize who is paid by salary shall not take any fee for his own use; and if he is authorised by any act passed or hereafter to be passed to take any fee for any duty performed by him, he shall take (by

3. Definition of terms.—In this act—

The term "the Treasury" means the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury for the time being, or any two or more of them:

The term "Court of Chancery" means the High Court of Chancery of England, and includes all offices mentioned in the third schedule to this act.

The term "Court of Admiralty" means the High Court of Admiralty of England:

The term "Court of Bankruptcy" means, except where otherwise expressly mentioned, the Court of Bankruptcy in London as constituted at the passing of this act and the district Courts of Bankruptcy, and includes any court, whether constituted before or after the commencement of this act, which for the time being exercises the powers of the late court for the relief of insolvent debtors in England, so far as relates to such late court.

*Court of Chancery.*4. Transfer of stock and cash to National Debt Commissioners.

—As soon as may be after the commencement of this act the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall, upon an order of the Lord Chancellor to be made in that behalf, and without any draft from the Accountant-General, or act done by him, transfer to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt all sums of stock and cash which on the commencement of this act may be standing in the books of the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the credit of any of the accounts described in the second part of the first schedule to this act, and all dividends which may then be or thereafter become due on such stock.

5. Indemnity out of Consolidated Fund to suitors of Court of Chancery.—After the commencement of this act the Consolidated Fund shall, to the same extent as the stock and cash so transferred, be liable to make good to the suitors of the Court of Chancery the debts which at the commencement of this act may be due to them in cash from the Court of Chancery in manner stated in the first part of the first schedule to this act, and the Treasury shall in manner provided by this act cause the sums required for the payment of such debts to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund.

6. Deficiency and excess of cash balance to credit of Accountant-General.—Whenever the Lord Chancellor certifies in writing to the Treasury that the cash balance for the time being standing at the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery is less than three hundred thousand pounds, or such other sum as may be from time to time fixed by the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury (regard being had to the amount required for carrying on the business of the office to the Accountant-General, and to the proper remuneration of the Bank of England), the Treasury shall forthwith cause to be paid into the Bank of England to the credit and with the privity of the said Accountant-General to be applied by him as part of the common and general cash of the suitors of the said court, such sum out of the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund as may be required to make up the said cash balance to the sum of five hundred thousand pounds, or such other sum as may from time to time be fixed in manner aforesaid, and the liability of the Consolidated Fund under this act shall be diminished by the amount of the sum so paid.

Whenever the said cash balance exceeds the sum of five hundred thousand pounds, or such other sum as may be fixed in manner aforesaid, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall, upon an order of the Lord Chancellor (to be made on the written requisition of the Treasury), and without any draft from the Accountant-General, or any act to be done by him, transfer such excess, or such part thereof as may be specified in the order, to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and on such transfer being made the Consolidated Fund shall be further liable to the extent of any sum so transferred to make good to the suitors of the Court of Chancery any sum of cash due from the court to them.

The said Accountant-General shall keep an account in his books showing the amount of the debts due from the Consolidated Fund to the suitors of the court in respect of all sums of stock and cash transferred to the said commissioners under this act.

7. As to unclaimed dividends under sect. 3 of 16 & 17 Vict. c. 98.—Where the Lord Chancellor, in pursuance of section three of the act of the session of the sixteenth and seventeenth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter ninety-eight, "for the further relief of the suitors of the High Court of Chancery," makes an order for carrying any dividends or cash to the credit of "the suitors' unclaimed dividend account," the dividends and cash so carried over shall be paid into the receipt of Her Majesty's Exchequer and carried to the Consolidated Fund. On any order made by the court, under section two of the same act, for paying to a suitor any dividends or cash so carried over, the Treasury shall, if required in writing by the Lord Chancellor, out of the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund, pay the same into the Bank with the privity of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery to the credit of the account from which such dividends were carried.

8. Income of Court of Chancery to go to Consolidated Fund.—After the commencement of this act the rent of any of the Masters' offices in Southampton-buildings, Chancery-lane, all brokerage payable by the Broker of the Court of Chancery to the credit of the Suitors' Fee Fund, and all sums for rent received by the Solicitor to the Suitors Fund, and payable by him to the credit of any of the accounts or funds mentioned in part two of the first schedule to this act, and all moneys which, but for the passing of this act, would be payable to the credit of any of the said accounts or funds, shall be paid into the receipt of Her Majesty's Exchequer at such times and in such manner as the Treasury may direct, and shall be carried to the Consolidated Fund.

Cap. 91.

Court of Bankruptcy.

9. Transfer of stock and cash to National Debt Commissioners.—As soon as may be after the commencement of this act the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall, upon an order of the Lord Chancellor to be made in that behalf, and without any draft from the Accountant in Bankruptcy, or act done by him, transfer to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt all sums of stock and cash which on the commencement of this act may be standing in the books of the Bank of England in the name of the Accountant in Bankruptcy to the credit of any of the accounts described in the second part of the second schedule to this act, and all dividends which may then be or thereafter become due on such stock.

10. Indemnity out of Consolidated Fund to suitors of Court of Bankruptcy.—After the commencement of this act the Consolidated Fund shall be liable to make good the debts due in cash from the Court of Bankruptcy in respect of the estates of bankrupts, in manner stated in the first part of the second schedule to this act, and the debts due in cash from the late Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England in respect of estates of insolvent debtors, in manner stated in the first part of the same schedule, and the Treasury shall in manner provided by this act cause the sums required for the payment of such debts to be issued out of the Consolidated Fund.

11. Deficiency and excess of cash balance to credit of Accountant in Bankruptcy.—Whenever the Lord Chancellor certifies to the Treasury that the cash balance for the time being standing at the Bank of England to the credit of the Accountant in Bankruptcy is less than fifty thousand pounds, or such other sum as may from time to time be fixed by the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury (regard being had to the amount required for carrying on the business of the office of the accountant and to the proper remuneration of the Bank of England), the Treasury shall forthwith cause to be paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant to be applied by him as part of such cash balance, such sum out of the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund as may be required to make up the said cash balance to the sum of one hundred thousand pounds, or such other sum as may from time to time be fixed in manner aforesaid.

Whenever the said cash balance exceeds the sum of one hundred thousand pounds, or such other sum as may from time to time be fixed in manner aforesaid, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England shall, on an order of the Lord Chancellor to be made on the written requisition of the Treasury, and without any draft from the accountant, or act done by him, transfer such excess, or such part thereof as may be specified in the order, to the account of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, and on such transfer being made the Consolidated Fund shall be further liable to the extent of the sum so paid to make good any sum of cash due from the Court of Bankruptcy in respect of estates of bankrupts and insolvents.

If under any act passed in the present session any of the duties previously performed by the Accountant in Bankruptcy are transferred to any other officer, the provisions of this section shall apply in the same manner as if they had been separately enacted with respect to such officer and his office and the duties to be performed by him, and such officer had been named herein instead of the said accountant.

Salaries, Pensions, &c.

12. Salaries of judges charged on Consolidated Fund.—After the commencement of this act the salaries and pensions of the judges mentioned in the first parts of the third and fourth schedules to this act shall be paid out of the Consolidated Fund.

13. Compensations, pensions, salaries, &c., charged on annual votes.—After the commencement of this Act all compensations, pensions, retiring annuities, and superannuation allowances, at that date charged on any of the stock or cash standing to any of the accounts mentioned in the first or second schedules to this act, or any of the interest of any such stock, and the salaries, charges, and payments described in the second parts of the third and fourth schedules to this Act, and the salaries of and all pensions and superannuation allowances which may be granted to existing and future officers, clerks, and persons employed in the Court of Chancery or the Court of Bankruptcy, and the expenses and contingencies of those courts and of the offices therein, and all other sums payable under any act relating to such courts, out of any of the stock and cash transferred under this act, or the interest of such stock, including sums payable in pursuance of section sixteen of the Courts of Justice Building Act 1865 (which relates to the purchase of compensation allowances), and also all arrears of such compensations, pensions, annuities, allowances, salaries, charges, and payments accrued before the commencement of this act, shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament for the purpose.

All compensations, pensions, annuities, allowances, and salaries payable under this section shall be deemed to accrue from day to day, but shall be payable on such days as the Treasury may from time to time appoint.

If the moneys provided by Parliament are at any time insufficient for the purposes mentioned in this section, the Consolidated Fund shall be liable to make good such deficiency to the same extent to which the stock and cash, and the interest of such stock, transferred under this act, or the income thereof, are liable at the commencement of this act.

Nothing in this act shall deprive any person who at the commencement of this act enjoys any compensation, pension, retiring annuity, superannuation allowance, or salary mentioned in this section, of his right to continue to receive the same compensation, pension, retiring annuity, superannuation allowance, or salary, or of any right he may have to receive any progressive or prospective increase of salary, or to obtain any promotion, or succession, or any pension, retiring annuity, or superannuation allowance, and nothing in this act shall affect or diminish any such right.

Officers of Court.

14. Appointment of officers.—The Treasury may from time to time, by order made with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, and also with the concurrence of the Master of the Rolls, in the case of officers who are appointed or whose salaries are fixed by the Master of the Rolls, either solely or jointly with the Lord Chancellor, and with the concurrence of the judge of the Court of Admiralty in the case of the officers of that court, increase or diminish the number of officers in the Courts of Chancery, Bankruptcy, and Admiralty, and the amounts of the salaries of such officers, and determine the conditions on which they are to hold their offices, and regulate the expenses and contingencies incurred in respect of the said courts or the officers belonging thereto.

Any officer appointed after the commencement of this act shall take his office subject to any order that may thereafter be made under this section in relation to the abolition or modification of his office, but no order made under this section shall, without his consent, apply to any officer holding office at the date of the commencement of this act, and when the conditions on which any officer is to hold his office, and the salary to be paid to him, have been determined by any order under this section for the time being in force, no subsequent order under this section shall apply to such officer without his consent.

Any order made under this section shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within fourteen days after it is made, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, within fourteen days after the commencement of the next session. It shall also be published in the London Gazette, and when so published shall be of the same force as if it were enacted in this act, but subject to being varied or repealed from time to time by other orders made in like manner under this act, and any enactment inconsistent with such order shall be repealed from and after the date of any such publication.

The term "officer" in this section means all officers, clerks, messengers, and persons who are mentioned in the second parts of the third and fourth schedules to this act, or are for the time being employed in the said Courts of Chancery, Bankruptcy, and Admiralty, or any of them, or the offices connected therewith.

Buildings.

15. Courts and buildings.—The building in Basinghall-street in the City of London, known as the Court of Bankruptcy, and the buildings in Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, formerly known as the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors (and occupied at the commencement of this act by the officers of that court, and by the Land Registry and the Courts of Justice Commission), shall, with the sites thereof, continue vested in the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and shall be appropriated as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury, from time to time directs.

On the commencement of this act all the rights and interest of the district commissioners in the buildings then used for the District Courts of Bankruptcy, and in all other buildings vested in the district commissioners as such, and in the sites thereof, and in all furniture and effects belonging to the district courts, and the offices thereof, shall be transferred to and vest in the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and the same shall be appropriated as the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury, from time to time directs.

Fees.

16. Alteration of fees in Court of Chancery.—After the commencement of this act the Lord Chancellor, with the advice and consent of the Lords Justices of Appeal, Master of the Rolls, and Vice-Chancellors, or any three of them, and with the concurrence of the Treasury, may from time to time by order increase, reduce, or abolish all or any of the existing fees and percentages (including the percentage on estates of lunatics), and appoint new fees to be taken in relation to proceedings in the Court of Chancery, or in any of the offices mentioned in the third schedule to this act.

Until any such order is made the fees existing at the commencement of this act shall continue to be taken.

17. Fees in Court of Admiralty.—After the commencement of this act, the judge of the Court of Admiralty may from time to time by order, with the concurrence of the Treasury, increase, reduce, or abolish all or any of the existing fees, and appoint new fees to be taken in relation to proceedings in the Court of Admiralty.

Cap. 91.

Until any such order is made the fees existing at the commencement of this act shall continue to be taken.

18. Fees in Court of Bankruptcy.—After the commencement of this act the Lord Chancellor, with the concurrence of the Treasury, may from time to time by order increase, reduce, or abolish all or any of the existing fees, and appoint new fees to be taken in relation to proceedings in the Court of Bankruptcy.

Until any such order is made the fees existing at the commencement of this act shall continue to be taken.

19. Fees to be taken by stamps.—After the commencement of this act all fees whatever, or payments in the nature or lieu of fees, for the time being payable in the Courts of Chancery, Admiralty, and Bankruptcy, or any of the offices therein, including the percentage payable out of estates of lunatics, shall, except so far as the Lord Chancellor may from time to time otherwise by order direct, be taken by means of stamps, and if taken in money in pursuance of any such order shall be paid into the receipt of Her Majesty's Exchequer, and be carried to the Consolidated Fund.

20. Stamp to be impressed or adhesive.—All or any stamps to be used under this act shall be impressed or adhesive, as the Treasury from time to time direct.

21. General rules to be made by Treasury.—The Treasury, with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor, or, in the case of the Court of Admiralty, of the judge of that court, may from time to time make such rules as seem fit for regulating the use of stamps under this act, and particularly for prescribing the application thereof to documents from time to time in use or required to be used for the purposes of such stamps, and for insuring the proper cancellation of adhesive stamps and keeping accounts of such stamps.

22. Documents not properly stamped to be invalid.—Any document which ought to bear a stamp under this act shall not be of any validity unless and until it is properly stamped; but if any such document is through mistake or inadvertence received, filed, or used without being properly stamped, the Lord Chancellor or a judge of one of the said courts may, if he thinks fit, order that the same be stamped as in such order may be directed, and on such document being stamped accordingly the same and every proceeding relative thereto shall be as valid as if such document had been properly stamped in the first instance.

23. Receipts from stamps to be paid to Consolidated Fund.—The Commissioners of Inland Revenue shall keep a separate account of all money received in respect of stamps under this act; and, subject to the deduction of any expenses incurred by those commissioners in the execution of this act, the money so received, shall, under the direction of the Treasury, be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund.

24. Annual account and expenditure of Courts of Chancery and Bankruptcy.—The Treasury shall cause to be prepared annually (with respect to the Court of Chancery and the Court of Bankruptcy separately) an account for the year ending the thirty-first of March, showing on the one side the following receipts:

1. The dividends or interest which would have arisen from the stock transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt under this act, and from the stock and securities purchased with cash so transferred, if such stock and securities were not cancelled;
2. All unclaimed dividends, rents, brokerage, and other sums paid into the receipt of Her Majesty's Exchequer under this act in respect of the said courts respectively;
3. The amount received, after deducting the expenses, in respect of fees and percentages taken in relation to proceedings in the said courts respectively, or in any of the offices thereof; and showing on the other side the expenditure during such year for compensations, pensions, retiring annuities, superannuation allowances, salaries, charges, expenses, and payments incurred in respect of the said courts respectively.

Where any sum has been paid in pursuance of this act out of the growing produce of the Consolidated Fund to the credit of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, or the accountant in bankruptcy or other officer, such allowance shall be made in the said accounts as if on the day of such payment an amount of the Three per Centum Consolidated Bank Annuities transferred under this act had been sold sufficient to raise the sum so paid.

The term "Court of Bankruptcy" in this section means the court as defined by this act, or as constituted by any act of the present session.

25. Application of sect. 3 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 122, to Admiralty fees.—So much of the "Courts of Law Fees Act, 1867," as relates to the account with respect to the High Court of Admiralty, shall be construed as if the fees therein referred to were the fees authorised under this act.

26. Accounts to show surplus and deficit, and comparison for two years.—Each of the said annual accounts prepared in pursuance of this act shall show the deficit or surplus of receipts as compared with expenditure, and the second of each such yearly accounts and every subsequent account shall show the items for two consecutive years, and the increase or decrease of any item in the second of those years as compared with the first.

The first of the said annual accounts shall be made up for the period between the commencement of this act and the thirty-first day of March one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

27. Accounts to be laid before Houses of Parliament.—Each of the said annual accounts prepared in pursuance of this act shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within one month after the thirty-first day of March in each year, if Parliament is then sitting, or if not, then within one month after the next meeting of Parliament.

28. Provision for deficit on accounts.—If in any year there is a deficit on either of the annual accounts as aforesaid, the amount of such deficit shall be debited to the same account in the next following year; provided that no such deficit shall be debited to any account unless and until there has been in some year a surplus on the same account, and after there has been such a surplus the deficit (if any) of every subsequent year shall be so debited, but not that of any year previous to that in which there first was a surplus.

Miscellaneous.

29. Saving for act of present session.—The provisions of this act with respect to the Court of Bankruptcy shall be subject to any provisions made with respect to that court by any act passed in the present session.

30. Application of stock and cash transferred to Commissioners for Reduction of National Debt.—As soon as any sums of stock have been transferred in pursuance of this act to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, the Treasury shall by warrant direct the Governor and Company of the Bank of England to cancel such sums in the books of the said Governor and Company. The Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt shall apply all cash transferred to them in pursuance of this act in reduction of the National Debt in the same manner as if such cash were a surplus of the annual revenue.

31. Accounts.—The Treasury shall cause to be kept by such persons and in such manner as they may from time to time direct, accounts of the liability of the Consolidated Fund under this Act, and such accounts as may be necessary in order to admit of the preparation of the annual accounts required by this Act in respect of the Courts of Chancery and Bankruptcy.

32. Orders by Lord Chancellor.—The Lord Chancellor may from time to time make such orders as he may think necessary for carrying this act into effect.

33. Treasury may make regulations.—The Treasury from time to time may make such rules and regulations and issue such order concerning the form and mode of transmission of certificates and vouchers, and otherwise for checking, controlling, and regulating the payment of the charges transferred by this act to the Consolidated Fund or moneys provided by Parliament, and for enforcing and regulating the accounting for and due payment of the stock and moneys to be transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, or to be carried to the Consolidated Fund under this Act, as they may think fit; and a return of any such rules and regulations which may be issued by the Treasury shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within six weeks from the date of the issue thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, and if it be not then sitting, within six weeks from the day of the next ensuing meeting of Parliament.

34. Repeal of acts as in the 5th schedule.—The enactments described in the fifth schedule to this Act are hereby repealed.

Provided that this repeal shall not affect anything already done or suffered, or any right acquired or order made, under the said enactments or any of them.

Nor shall this repeal affect the right of any person to receive such salary, compensation, retiring annuity, pension, superannuation allowance, or progressive or prospective increase of salary, or to obtain such promotion or succession, or pension, retiring annuity, or superannuation allowance as he might have received or obtained if this repeal had not been enacted.

NEW PARISHES AND CHURCH BUILDING ACTS AMENDMENT ACT.

An Act to amend the New Parishes Acts and Church Building Acts.—[9th August, 1869.]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Powers of New Parishes Acts to apply at any time to new parishes for ecclesiastical purposes.—The powers and provisions, relating to the alteration of the boundaries of districts which are contained in the ninth section of "The New Parishes Act, 1844," shall, notwithstanding the lapse of the periods of twelve months and five years mentioned in the same section and in the twenty-seventh section of the act of the thirteenth and fourteenth years of Her Majesty, chapter ninety-four, respectively, or either of them, be at any time applicable to the alteration of the boundaries of any and every ecclesiastical district which may or shall have become a new parish for ecclesiastical purposes under the provisions of the "New Parishes Acts," whether such district has been or shall have been originally created under the provisions of the said acts or any of them, or of any other act of Parliament.

Cap. 91.

2. Pews or sittings may be surrendered to Ecclesiastical Commissioners.—Whenever by virtue of any public or private act of Parliament now or hereafter in force, or by virtue of any deed or instrument, the pews or sittings, or some or one of the pews or sittings, in any church or chapel, consecrated or unconsecrated, are or is or shall be subject to any trust as to the grant, demise, sale, or disposal of such pews or sittings, pew or sitting, or are, is, or shall be the private property for any estate whatsoever of any person or persons, then and in every such case it shall be lawful for the trustees of such church or chapel, or other the persons exercising powers of grant, demise, sale, or disposal as aforesaid, or for all or any persons possessing on their own behalf or on the behalf of others any rights, qualified or unqualified, of ownership, by reason of any such grant, demise, sale, or disposal as aforesaid, or for any person or persons to whom any pews or sittings, pew or sitting, in such church or chapel, shall belong for any estate whatsoever, under or by virtue of such act of Parliament, deed, or instrument as aforesaid with or without consideration, to surrender and for ever yield up either altogether or separately, and according to the nature and extent of their several rights and interests, to the bishop of the diocese wherein such church or chapel is situate, or to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England, who are hereby respectively authorised to accept every such surrender, all rights of ownership, grant, demise, sale, disposal, or other right whatsoever which they, the said trustees, persons or person, may have in, over, or in respect of such pews or sittings, pew or sitting.

3. Surrender to be by deed, executed by the parties, including bishop of diocese.—Every such surrender shall be made by deed executed by all the parties to the same, amongst whom shall be included the bishop of the diocese wherein the church or chapel to be affected by it is situate, and the patron or patrons of such church or chapel aforesaid; and such deed shall be registered in the registry of the said diocese.

4. Upon surrender all rights of ownership, &c., to cease.—So soon as all rights and powers over or in respect of the pews or sittings in any such church or chapel shall have been surrendered to the bishop of the diocese or to the said commissioners as aforesaid, the trusts or rights of ownership, and the obligations affecting such pews or sittings, or any of them, under such act of Parliament, deed, or instrument as aforesaid, shall at once and ipso facto determine, and all the provisions of such act of Parliament, deed, or instrument as to pews or sittings in such church or chapel shall thenceforth be void and of none effect.

5. And pews, &c., subject as pews of ancient parish churches.—From and after every such surrender to the said bishop or commissioners, the pews or sittings, pew or sitting, affected thereby shall, to the extent of the rights or powers expressed to be surrendered, be subject to the same laws as to all rights and property therein as the pews and sittings of ancient parish churches are now subject to: Provided, that if the church or chapel be not consecrated such pews or sittings, pew or sitting, shall belong absolutely to the bishop and his successors or to the said commissioners, as the case may be, until the consecration of the said church or chapel, and from and after the consecration thereof the right of the said bishop or commissioners shall cease, and the said pews or sittings shall be subject to the same laws as to all rights and property therein as the pews and sittings of ancient parish churches.

6. Powers hereinbefore contained to apply to and authorise absolute transfer to Ecclesiastical Commissioners.—The powers and provisions hereinbefore contained as to pews and sittings subject to trusts as aforesaid in any such church or chapel as aforesaid shall, mutatis mutandis, be held to apply to and shall be held to authorise the absolute transfer and conveyance to the said commissioners, by any deed or deeds, made without consideration and executed by all the parties thereto as aforesaid, of the freehold of any church or chapel, consecrated or unconsecrated, and of the vaults therein or thereunder, which, under or by virtue of any such act of Parliament, deed, or instrument as aforesaid, is or are or shall be vested in any persons or person in their own right or as trustees or trustee of such church or chapel for an estate in perpetuity; and if such church or chapel be unconsecrated at the time of such transfer and conveyance, such freehold so transferred and conveyed shall remain in the said commissioners until the consecration of the same church or chapel, and shall then ipso facto become subject to the same laws as to all rights and property therein as the pews and the sittings of ancient parish churches.

7. Upon complete surrender, all rights created by act for building church to cease.—In every case in which a complete surrender and determination of the rights, powers, obligations, and trusts affecting the pews or sittings in a church or chapel shall have been carried out as aforesaid, and in every case in which such transfer and conveyance as aforesaid of the freehold of a church or chapel, and the vaults (if any) thereof, shall have been effected, all other rights, powers, obligations, and trusts created, conferred, or enforced as to such church or chapel by the act of Parliament, deed, or instrument under which such church or chapel was built, shall upon such complete surrender and determination, or (as the case may be) such transfer and conveyance absolutely cease and determine; provided always, that such cesser and determination shall not diminish or in anywise affect any right or rights of patronage.

8. Provision for sites of churches pulled down.—In and by any faculty granted by a bishop for wholly pulling down any church, under the provisions contained in the first section of the act eighth and ninth Victoria, chapter seventy, it shall be lawful to make such provision as such bishop may deem proper and expedient for the use or preservation of the site of such church, either by the incumbent of the substituted church, or by the churchwardens of the parish wherein such site lies, or by any other person being the owner of the freehold of the land adjoining such site with the consent of the incumbent and of such other person.

9. The portions of a benefice held in severalty may be consolidated into one.—In every case where the respective incumbents of two or more benefices held in severalty (whether each of such benefices belongs to the same patron or to different patrons) have or shall have by statute or by custom the right in virtue of their respective incumbencies to execute the office of an incumbent within one and the same church, and within no other church other than a chapel of ease, then the powers and provisions given by and contained in the seventy-second section of the act of the third and fourth years of Her Majesty, chapter one hundred and thirteen, with respect to the consolidation of two or more portions of a benefice divided as therein mentioned into one benefice to be held by one incumbent shall, subject to the conditions therein expressed, be available for and shall apply to and may be used for effecting the consolidation of both or all of such benefices into one benefice to be held by one incumbent, and this notwithstanding that such benefice when so united may include the cure of souls within more than one parish: Provided always, that any plan or scheme for such consolidation to be framed under the provisions of the act last mentioned may contain a regulation that such consolidation shall not take effect until after the next avoidance of any one or more of such benefices to be specially named in such plan or scheme; and provided also, that nothing herein contained shall be held to create an union of the two or more parishes so as aforesaid to be included within such united benefice, but that each of such parishes shall remain for all purposes, civil and ecclesiastical, precisely in the same position as if no such union of benefices as aforesaid had taken place.

10. Part of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, s. 18, repealed.—So much of the eighteenth section of the act of the nineteenth and twentieth Victoria, chapter one hundred and four, as requires that in the case of a benefice in the patronage of the incumbent for the time being of any other benefice the consent of the patron of such other benefice, if a private patron, shall be necessary in order to effect an assignment of patronage under the last-mentioned act, is hereby repealed, but the private patron in any such case shall have one month's notice from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and he may require the commissioners to assess the amount of diminution in the value of his advowson, if any, likely to be caused by any contemplated assignment of patronage under the said act, or may require that such diminution shall be ascertained by reference to the decision of two arbitrators, one to be appointed by himself and the other by the commissioners, and if thereupon it shall appear that any such diminution will be caused by the assignment of patronage contemplated, such private patron shall be entitled to claim and recover the amount of such diminution from the person or persons or body to whom the said assignment of patronage may be made.

11. As to parish where there is no church and no patron.—In the case of any parish or place wherein there is no parish church nor any person known to be or claiming to be patron of the ancient church or advowson, if any, of such parish or place, then for all purposes of forming an ecclesiastical district or ecclesiastical districts either wholly or partly out of such parish or place under the powers of the Church Building Acts or New Parishes Acts, or any other act or acts of Parliament now or hereafter in force, such parish or place shall be deemed to be and shall be treated for such purposes as an extra-parochial place, and in any case in which notice shall be required to be sent or given to a patron under the provisions of such acts or any of them it shall be sufficient with respect to such parish or place so to be treated as an extra-parochial place as aforesaid to send or give such notice to the bishop of the diocese alone, and such notice when so sent or given shall be held to be a full compliance with the requirements of the said acts or act in respect of such notice: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall affect the rights of the Crown, if any, with regard to any such parish or place.

12. Contract for the assignment of patronage under the Church Building and New Parishes Acts not to be simoniacal.—No contract, agreement, or arrangement under any of the provisions of the Church Building Acts or New Parishes Acts relative to the exercise by, or the vesting in, or the assignment to any body or person of the right of patronage or of presentation to any church or chapel, in consideration of such body or person erecting or enlarging or contributing towards or procuring or agreeing to procure the erecting or the enlarging of such church, or permanently endowing or contributing towards or procuring or agreeing to procure the permanent endowment of such church or of its incumbent or minister, shall be deemed corrupt or simoniacal.

13. Certain assignments of patronage under Church Building and New Parishes Acts to be valid, and none of the penalties against simony to attach.—Every instrument whereby any declaration or assignment or other disposition of any right of patronage or of presentation to any church or chapel has already been made, or shall hereafter be made under any of the provisions of the said acts, or in pursuance of any such contract or agreement as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have been and shall be good; and every presentation, institution, or induction which has already taken place, or shall hereafter take place in pursuance thereof, or of any such contract, agreement, or arrangement as aforesaid, shall be deemed to have been and shall be good, and no penalty or disability under either the canon law or the common or statute law shall be deemed to have been or shall be thereby incurred.

14. Meaning of "church" and "chapel."—The words church and chapel in this act shall apply only to churches and chapels of the Established Church of England.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 99.

Cap. 99.

An Act for the more effectual Prevention of Crime.— [9th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to make further provision for the suppression of crimes committed by convicts at large on licence or by other offenders:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Habitual Criminals Act, 1869."

2. Definition of terms.—In this act the term "court" includes any justice or justices of the peace or other person or persons having jurisdiction in the matter to which the term refers. "Chief officer of police" shall mean within the district of the London metropolitan police force the Commissioner of Police, or an assistant commissioner, or a district superintendent; in the City of London the commissioner of police; within the police district of Dublin metropolis any one of the commissioners of police for the said district; and elsewhere shall include any of the following persons,—in England, any chief constable, head constable, or other chief officer of police or of a division of police, by whatever name such chief officer may be called; the expression "stipendiary magistrate" shall include a metropolitan police magistrate; and in Ireland, any inspector, sub-inspector, head or other constable of the Royal Irish Constabulary acting as chief officer of constabulary within any district or town. Where in any of the provisions of this act the expression "stipendiary magistrate" is used, such provisions shall be interpreted in Scotland as if the expression "sheriff or sheriff substitute" had been used.

PART I.

CONVICTS AT LARGE ON LICENCE.

3. Power to apprehend holders of licence on suspicion.—Any constable or police officer may, if authorised so to do in writing by a chief officer of police, without warrant, take into custody any convict who is the holder of a licence granted under "The Penal Servitude Acts, 1853, 1857, and 1864," or any of them, and whom he has reason to believe to be getting a livelihood by dishonest means, and may bring him before two or more justices of the peace or a stipendiary magistrate.

If it shall appear from the facts proved before such justices or magistrate that there are reasonable grounds for such belief, his licence shall be forfeited in the same manner as if he had been convicted of an indictable offence, and the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought shall commit him to any prison within their or his jurisdiction, there to remain until he can conveniently be removed to some prison in which convicts under sentence of penal servitude may lawfully be confined, in order that he may there undergo the term of penal servitude to which he is liable under the said Penal Servitude Acts or some of them.

4. Penalty for breach of conditions of licence.—Where in any licence granted under the said Penal Servitude Acts, or any of them, any conditions different from or in addition to those contained in Schedule A. of "The Penal Servitude Act, 1864," are inserted, the holder of such licence shall, on a breach of such conditions, be deemed guilty of an offence, in the same manner as if such conditions were contained in the said Schedule A.

There shall be repealed so much of the fourth section of "The Penal Servitude Act, 1864," as requires the holder of a licence to report himself personally once in each month.

A copy of any conditions annexed to any licence granted under the Penal Servitude Acts, other than the conditions contained in Schedule A. of "The Penal Servitude Act, 1864," shall be laid before Parliament within twenty-one days after the making thereof, if Parliament be then sitting, or if not, then within fourteen days after the commencement of the next session of Parliament.

PART II.

REGISTRATION OF CRIMINALS.

5. Register of criminals.—For the better supervision of criminals a register of all persons convicted of crime in England shall be kept in London, under the management of the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis, or of such other person as one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may appoint, and in Dublin a like register shall be kept, under the management of the Commissioners of Police for the police district of Dublin metropolis, or of such other person as the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland may appoint, in such form, with such evidences of identity, and containing such particulars, and subject to such regulations as may from time to time be prescribed by one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State in England, or in Ireland by the Lord Lieutenant. All expenses incurred with the sanction of the Commissioners of the Treasury in keeping such register shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament.

6. Returns for purposes of register.—In order to make such register complete, and to make the supervision over criminals effectual, the gaolers or governors of county and borough prisons, and the chief officers of police in every county, borough, and other place in the United Kingdom which maintains a separate police, shall from time to time make returns, if such prison, county, borough, or other place be in Great Britain, to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and if the same be situate in Ireland to the Lord Lieutenant or other Chief Governor or Governors of Ireland, or to such person as they may respectively appoint, in such manner, and at such time, and containing such evidences of identity and other information with respect to persons convicted of crime, as they may from time to time respectively direct.

All expenses incurred in any place in carrying this section into effect with the sanction of the authority authorised to allow charges on the funds for the maintenance of the police in that place shall be deemed to be part of the expenses of such police and be defrayed accordingly.

7. Part of act to be construed with Penal Servitude Acts.—The first two parts of this act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, shall be construed as one with the said Penal Servitude Acts. Crime, for the purposes of this act, so far as relates to the registration of criminals, shall mean any felony or any offence not a felony specified in the first schedule hereto.

PART III.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS.

8. Person twice guilty of felony and not punished with penal servitude to be subject to the supervision of the police.—Where any person is convicted on indictment of any offence specified in the first schedule hereto in England or Ireland, and in the second schedule hereto in Scotland, and he be proved to have been previously convicted of any offence specified in the said schedule, either before or after the passing of this act, then, in addition to any other punishment which may be awarded to him, it shall be deemed to be part of the sentence passed on him, unless otherwise declared by the court, that he is to be subject to the supervision of the police as hereinafter mentioned for a period of seven years, or such less period as the court shall direct, commencing from the time at which he is convicted, and exclusive of the time during which he is undergoing his punishment.

Where any person is subject, in pursuance of this act, to the supervision of the police, he shall be guilty of an offence punishable (on summary conviction before two or more justices or a stipendiary magistrate) with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding one year, under the following circumstances, or any of them:

First. If, on his being charged by a constable or police officer with getting his livelihood by dishonest means, he fails to make it appear to the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought that he is not getting his livelihood by dishonest means:

Secondly. If he is found by any constable or police officer in any place, whether public or private, under such circumstances as to satisfy the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought that he was about to commit or to aid in the commission of any crime punishable on summary conviction or indictment, or was waiting for an opportunity to commit or aid in the commission of any such crime:

Cap. 99.

Thirdly. If he is found by any person in or upon any dwelling house, or any building, yard, or premises, being parcel of or attached to such dwelling house, or in or upon any shop, warehouse, counting-house, or other place of business, or in any garden, orchard, pleasure ground, or nursery ground, without being able to account to the satisfaction of the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought for his being found on such premises.

Any person charged with being guilty of any offence punishable on summary conviction under this section may be taken into custody by any constable or police officer without warrant, or may, if charged with being guilty of an offence committed under the circumstances thirdly hereinbefore mentioned, or any of them, be apprehended by the owner or occupier of the property on which he is found, or by the servants of the owner or occupier, or by any other person authorised by the owner or occupier, and may be detained until he can be delivered into the custody of a constable or police officer for the purpose of being brought before the justices or magistrate; provided that no person shall be so taken into custody on the ground that he is suspected of getting his livelihood by dishonest means except under a written authority from a chief officer of police.

When a person is convicted under this section of an offence which subjects him to the supervision of the police, the record of his conviction shall contain a statement to the effect that he is subject to the supervision of the police in pursuance of this act for a period of seven years commencing from the date of his conviction, and exclusive of the time during which he is undergoing his punishment, or words to the like purport, but the omission of any such statement shall not exempt any person from the operation of this section.

A convict who has been sentenced to penal servitude shall not during the time when he is at large under a licence granted under the said Penal Servitude Acts, or any of them, be deemed for the purposes of this section to be undergoing his punishment.

9. Amendment of sect. 4 of the Vagrant Act (5 Geo. 4. c. 83).—And whereas by the fourth section of the act passed in the fifth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter eighty-three, intitled "An Act for the Punishment of idle and disorderly Persons, and Rogues and Vagabonds, in that Part of Great Britain called England," it is, amongst other things, provided that every suspected person or reputed thief frequenting any river, canal, or navigable stream, dock, or basin, or any quay, wharf, or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway, or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and may be apprehended and committed to prison with hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months: And whereas doubts are entertained as to the nature of the evidence required to prove for the purposes of the said section the intent to commit a felony: Be it enacted, that in proving such intent it shall not be necessary to show that the person suspected was guilty of any particular act or acts tending to show his purpose or intent, and he may be convicted if from the circumstances of the case, and from his known character as proved to the justices or magistrate, it appears to such justices or magistrate that his intent was to commit a felony.

10. Penalty for harbouring thieves, &c. (25 & 26 Vict. c. 101. s. 337).—Every person who occupies or keeps any lodging-house, beerhouse, public house, or other place where excisable liquors are sold, or place of public entertainment or public resort, and knowingly lodges or harbours thieves or reputed thieves, or knowingly permits or suffers them to meet or assemble therein, or allows the deposit of goods therein having reasonable cause for believing them to be stolen, shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds, and the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought may, if they or he think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any penalty, require him to enter into recognisances, with or without sureties, for keeping the peace or being of good behaviour during twelve months:

(1.) Provided that no person shall be imprisoned for not finding sureties in pursuance of this section for a longer period than three months:

(2.) The security required from a surety shall not exceed twenty pounds:

And any licence for the sale of any excisable liquors or for keeping any place of public entertainment or public resort which has been granted to the occupier or keeper of any such house or place as aforesaid shall be forfeited on his first conviction of an offence under this section, and on his second conviction for such an offence he shall be disqualified for a period of two years from receiving any such licence; moreover, where two convictions under this section have taken place within a period of two years in respect of the same premises, whether the persons convicted were or were not the same, the justices or magistrate may, if they or he so think fit, direct that for a term not exceeding one year from the date of the last of such convictions no such licence as aforesaid shall be granted to any person whatever in respect of such premises; and any licence granted in contravention of this section by the excise or otherwise shall be void.

PART IV.

RECEIVERS OF STOLEN GOODS.

11. Burden of proof in cases of receiving stolen goods.—Where any person who either before or after the passing of this act has been previously convicted of any offence specified in the first schedule hereto, and involving fraud or dishonesty, is found in the possession of stolen goods, evidence of such previous conviction shall be admissible as evidence of his knowledge that such goods have been stolen; and in any proceedings that may be taken against him as receiver of stolen goods, or otherwise in relation to his having been found in possession of such goods, proof may be given of his previous conviction before evidence is given of his having been found in possession of such stolen goods; provided that not less than seven days' notice shall be given to such person that proof is intended to be given of his previous conviction, and that he will be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he has proved the contrary.

Moreover, where proceedings are taken against any person for having in his possession stolen goods, evidence may be given that there were found in the possession of such person other goods stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the goods to be stolen which form the subject of the proceedings taken against him.

Any constable or police officer may, if authorised so to do in writing by a chief officer of police, enter any house, shop, warehouse, yard, or other premises in search of stolen goods, and make such search and seize and secure any property he may believe to have been stolen, in such manner as he would be authorised to do if he had a search warrant, and the property seized, if any, corresponded to the property described in such search warrant: Provided that in every case in which any property is seized, the person on whose premises it was at the time of seizure, or the person from whom it was taken if other than the person on whose premises it was, shall, unless previously charged with receiving the same knowing it to have been stolen, be summoned within three days before a justice of the peace or other competent magistrate to account for his possession of such property, and such justice or other magistrate shall make such order respecting the disposal of such property as the justice of the case may require; and it shall be lawful for any chief officer of police to give such authority as aforesaid in the following cases:—

First. When such premises are at, or have been within eighteen months of, the time of such search in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of receiving stolen property or of harbouring thieves:

Second. When such premises are at the time of such search in the occupation of any person who has been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, and punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment:

And it shall not be necessary for such chief officer of police in giving such authority to specify any particular property, but he may give such authority if he has reason to believe generally that such premises are being made a receptacle for stolen goods.

PART V.

ASSAULTS ON POLICE.

12. Assaults on police.—Where any person is convicted of an assault and battery on any constable or police or peace officer when in the execution of his duty, such person shall on summary conviction before two or more justices, or one stipendiary magistrate, be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, and in default of payment to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding six months, or in the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

PART VI.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

13. Power to remand.—Any person accused of an offence punishable on summary conviction under this act may be remanded from time to time by the justices or magistrate before whom he is brought for the purpose of enabling evidence to be obtained against him, or for any other just cause.

14. Forms in schedule.—The forms set forth in the second schedule to this act, or forms as near thereto as circumstances admit, may be used in all matters to which such forms refer, and when used shall be deemed to be valid and sufficient in law.

15. Constabulary station to include police stations in Dublin.—The term "constabulary station" in section four of "The Penal Servitude Act, 1864," shall include any police station within the police district of Dublin metropolis.

16. Children of convicts.—The provisions of "The Industrial Schools Act, 1861," shall apply to all children under the age of fourteen years of any woman who shall be convicted for the second time of any offence specified in the first schedule hereto, when such children shall at the time of the conviction be under her care and control, and have no visible means of subsistence.

17. Penalty on dealer in old metals.—Any dealer in old metals as defined in "The Old Metal Dealers Act, 1861," who shall either personally or by any servant or agent purchase, receive, or bargain for lead, whether new or old, in any quantity at one time of less weight than one hundred and twelve pounds, or who shall personally or by any servant or agent purchase, receive, or bargain for copper, whether new or old, in any quantity at one time of less weight than fifty-six pounds, shall be liable to a penalty of five pounds, to be recovered in the same manner as penalties incurred under the said recited act are therein directed to be recovered.

Cap. 99.

Cap. 99.

FIRST SCHEDULE.

Any felony not punishable with death also, or the offence of uttering false or counterfeit coin or of possessing counterfeit gold or silver coin, or the offence of obtaining goods or money by false pretences, or the offence of conspiracy to defraud, or misdemeanor under the fifty-eighth section of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth Victoria, chapter ninety-six.

THE SANITARY LOANS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 100.

An Act to facilitate the borrowing Money in certain Cases for the Purpose of "The Sanitary Act, 1866," and the Acts amending the same; and for other Purposes.—[11th August, 1869.]

Whereas by the Sanitary Act, 1866, the Sewage Utilisation Act, 1861, and the Sanitary Act, 1868, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State is empowered, in case of any sewer authority, local board, or nuisance authority making default in performing their duty in relation to the sanitary matters therein mentioned, to appoint a person to perform the same, and it is by the said acts provided that the person so appointed should be invested in the performance of his duties with all the powers of the authority in default, and that the expenses of the performance of such duties shall be a debt due from the authority in default and repayable out of any local rate leviable by them:

And whereas it is expedient to give further facilities to the said Secretary of State in carrying into effect the provisions of the said Act:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Sanitary Loans Act, 1869."

2. Application of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

Cap. 99.

Cap. 100.

3. Definition of "local authority."—"Sewer authority," "local board," and "nuisance authority," shall have the same meaning as they respectively have in the Sanitary Act, 1868, and "local authority" shall include all the said authorities.

"Local rate" shall have the same meaning as it has in the eighth section of the Sanitary Act, 1868.

4. Certificate of Secretary of State as to expenses and loans.—One of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State may, from time to time, certify under his hand the amount of expense that has been incurred, or an estimate of the expenses about to be incurred, by any person appointed by the Secretary of State for the purpose of performing the duty of a defaulting local authority; he may also, from time to time, certify under his hand the amount of any loan required to be raised for the purpose of defraying any expense that may have been so incurred, or is estimated as about to be incurred; and the certificate of the said Secretary of State shall be conclusive as to the matters to which it refers.

5. Power of Secretary of State to borrow money for sanitary purposes.—Whenever the said Secretary of State certifies any loan to be required for the purpose of defraying any expenses incurred or to be incurred in the performance of the duty of a defaulting local authority, the Public Works Loan Commissioners, as defined for the purposes of the Public Works Loan Act, 1853, may, in manner and subject to the provisions of the said act, and the other enactments relating to the said commissioners and applicable to the case, advance to the said Secretary of State, or to any person appointed by him as aforesaid, the amount of the loan so certified to be required on the security of the local rate, without requiring any other security, and the said Secretary of State, or the person appointed as aforesaid, may, by any instrument under his hand, charge the local rate with the repayment of the principal and interest due in respect of such loan, and any such charge shall have the same effect as if the defaulting local authority were empowered to raise such loan on the security of the local rate, and had duly executed an instrument charging the same upon the local rate; and the certificate of the Secretary of State certifying any loan to be required or appointing a person to perform the duty of a defaulting local authority shall be taken as conclusive evidence that all the requirements of the forty-ninth section of the "Sanitary Act, 1866," and of any other enactment relating thereto, have been duly complied with, and that the person appointed to perform the duty of the defaulting local authority has been duly appointed.

6. Remedy for principal and interest.—Any principal money or interest for the time being due in respect of any loan under this act made for payment of the expenses incurred or to be incurred in the performance of the duty of a defaulting local authority shall be taken to be a debt due from such authority, and, in addition to any other remedies, may be enforced in the manner in which a debt due from a defaulting authority may be enforced in pursuance of the said eighth section of the "Sanitary Act, 1868."

7. Application of surplus of loan.—If the amount of any loan raised for defraying the expenses incurred or to be incurred in the performance of the duty of a defaulting local authority is not wholly expended in defraying such expenses, the overplus (if any), the amount to be ascertained by a certificate of the Secretary of State, shall be paid to or to the order of the defaulting authority.

8. Secretary of State may change person performing duties of local authority.—The said Secretary of State may from time to time, by order under his hand, change the person appointed by him to perform the duty of a defaulting local authority.

9. Power of Secretary to order payments.—The Secretary of State may make order for the payment of the costs of all inquiries or proceedings directed by him in pursuance of the Local Government Act 1858, the Sanitary Acts 1866, 1868, the Sewage Utilization Acts 1865, 1867, or any of such acts, and as to the parties by whom or the rates out of which such costs shall be borne; and such orders may be enforced in the same way as orders for costs of appeals under the eighty-first section of the Local Government Act 1858.

10. Definition of expenses.—"Expenses" for the purposes of this Act shall include all sums payable by or by the order of the Secretary of State, or the person appointed by him, on the occasion of a default being made by any local authority in the performance of its duties in relation to sanitary matters.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 101.

An Act for authorising a Guarantee of a Loan to be raised by Canada for a Payment in Respect of the Transfer of Rupert's Land.—[11th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 102.

An Act for making further Provision respecting the borrowing of Money by the Metropolitan Board of Works; and for other Purposes connected therewith.—[9th August, 1869.]

An Act to amend the Law relating to the Warehousing of Wines and Spirits in Customs and Excise Warehouses; and for other Purposes relating to Customs and Inland Revenue.—[11th August, 1869.]

DIVIDENDS AND STOCK ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 104.

An Act for facilitating the Payment of Dividends on the Public Stocks, and for making Regulations with Respect thereto.—[11th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to give greater facilities for the payment of dividends on the public stocks, and to make further regulations in respect thereto:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited for all purposes as "The Dividends and Stock Act, 1869."

2. Power to send dividend warrants by post.—It shall be lawful for the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, hereinafter called the Bank, from time to time, with the sanction of the Commissioners of the Treasury, to make arrangements for payment of dividends on any stocks by sending warrants through the post. Every such warrant shall be deemed to be a cheque on the said Governor and Company within the intent and meaning of the statute of the twenty-first and twenty-second Victoria, chapter seventy-nine.

3. Effect of posting a warrant.—Every stockholder desirous of having his dividend warrants sent to him by post shall make a request accordingly in writing to the Bank, such writing to be signed by him, and to be in a form approved by the Bank and by the said commissioners, and shall give to the Bank an address in the United Kingdom to which the letters containing such warrants are from time to time to be sent, and the posting by the Bank of any letter addressed to a stockholder at his request at the address given by him to the Bank, and containing a dividend warrant, shall, as respects the liability of the Bank, be equivalent to the delivery of such warrant to the stockholder himself.

4. Change of day on which dividends on stock fall due.—The half-yearly dividends due on any public stocks which at the time of the passing of this act fall due on the tenth of October in each year shall from and after the passing of this act become due on the fifth of October instead of the tenth of October.

5. Audit of dividends.—The Treasury may from time to time make regulations as to the mode in which the audit of the accounts relating to dividends on public stocks is to be held by the Commissioners for Auditing the Public Accounts, and may if they think fit, dispense with such audit altogether.

6. Definition of terms.—In this act "public stocks" shall mean and include any stock forming part of the National Debt, and transferable in the books of the Bank:

"Stockholder" shall mean the proprietor of any share in the public stocks:

"Person" shall include corporation:

"United Kingdom" shall include the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, and any other islands adjacent to any part of the United Kingdom:

"Warrant" shall include draft, order, cheque, or any other document used as a medium for payment of dividends.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 105.

An Act for empowering the Public Works Loan Commissioners to advance a Sum not exceeding Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Pounds for the Improvement of the Harbour of Galle in the Colony of Ceylon.—[11th August, 1869.]

An Act to enable the Secretary of State in Council of India to raise Money in the United Kingdom for the Service of the Government of India.—[11th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 107.

An Act to amend "The Metropolitan Commons Act, 1866."—[11th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 108.

An Act to amend "The Sanitary Act, 1866," so far as the same relates to Ireland.—[11th August, 1869.]

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 109.

An Act for repealing Part of an Act of the First Year of the Reign of their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, intituled "An Act to vest in the two Universities the Presentations of Benefices belonging to Papists;" and for securing Uniformity in the Law relating to the Residence of spiritual Persons upon their Benefices, and to the Penalties and Forfeitures consequent on Non-residence.—[11th August, 1869.]

Cap. 104.

Cap. 110.

CHARITABLE TRUSTS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 110.

An Act for amending the Charitable Trusts Acts.—[11th August, 1869.]

Whereas doubts have arisen respecting the construction of some provisions of the Charitable Trusts Acts, and it is expedient to remove such doubts and otherwise to amend those acts:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Preliminary.

Sect. 1. Short title.—This act may be cited as "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1869."

2. Extent of act.—This act shall not extend to Scotland or Ireland.

3. Act to be construed with 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 112.—This act, so far as is consistent with the tenor thereof, shall be construed as one with "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853," "The Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855," and "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," and the act of the session of the twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter one hundred and twelve, "for establishing the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners in certain cases" (which may be cited as "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1862"), and those acts, together with this act, may be cited as "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 to 1869."

4. Amendment of sect. 3, of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 3.—A notice under section three of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," need not be sent by the Board of Charity Commissioners for England and Wales to any trustee or administrator of a charity who has been party or privy to the application to the board upon which they exercise their jurisdiction.

5. Mode of application to board.—An application to the Board of Charity Commissioners for England and Wales, for the purposes of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 to 1869," when made by the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, may be made in writing signed by any person authorised in that behalf by a resolution passed by a majority of those trustees or persons who are present at a meeting of their body duly constituted and vote on the question.

6. Powers of board on application.—The board shall be deemed to have and to have always had power in any order made upon an application to them, for the exercise of their jurisdiction under "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869," to insert in the order any incidental provisions which they think expedient for carrying into effect the substantial objects of the application, and which they would have had power to insert if such provisions had been included in the application.

7. Notice of order.—23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 6.—Nothing in "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869," shall be deemed to require or to have required the board, upon modifying a proposed order in manner provided by section six of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," after the publication thereof, to give public notice of such modified order in the manner provided by that section with respect to the order originally proposed, unless they think further notice desirable.

8. Discharge of order of board for irregularity.—The board shall be deemed to have and to have always had power with or without any application to discharge, within twelve months after an order is made by them, the whole or any part of any order appearing to have been made by them by mistake or on misrepresentation, or otherwise than in conformity with "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869."

Every order made by the board, in exercising their jurisdiction under "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869," shall, until discharged or varied by the board or by the Court of Chancery, on appeal under section eight of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," have effect according to its tenor.

Every order of the board shall, subject to all powers which the Court of Chancery has to discharge or vary it, under section eight of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," and subject to the power of the board to discharge it wholly or partially for the causes mentioned in this section, be deemed to have been duly and formally made, and no objection thereto on the ground only of irregularity or informality shall be entertained.

9. Employment of persons to prepare and defend scheme.—The board, if they think it desirable, where the gross annual income of a charity school is in their opinion sufficient to bear the expense, may, upon the application of the trustees or of any other person or persons entitled to apply to them in that behalf, employ or may authorise the trustees or persons acting in the administration of such charity to employ skilled and competent persons to prepare any scheme, order, statement, or other proceeding for the purposes of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 to 1869," with respect to such charity, or to make or assist in any survey or local inquiry with reference thereto, and may order the costs incurred under this section or upon any inquiry by an inspector, or in consequence of the employment of any person to appear on behalf of the respondent upon any appeal against any scheme or order, to be provided in the same manner as if they were costs of a transaction mentioned in section thirty-six of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1855."

10. Appeals under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136.—A petition to the Court of Chancery under section eight of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," may be presented in the case of all charities by the same persons only as in the case of a charity the gross annual income of which does not exceed fifty pounds.

11. Service of Attorney-General by appellant under sect. 8 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 8.—A petition shall not be presented to the Court of Chancery by any person under section eight of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," before the expiration of twenty-one days after written notice under the hand of the appellant of his intention to present such petition has been served on the Attorney-General by delivering the same to the solicitor who acts for him in ex-officio proceedings relating to charities.

12. Legal power of majority of trustees to deal with charity estates.—Where the trustees or persons acting in the administration of any charity have power to determine on any sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or other disposition of any property of the charity, a majority of those trustees or persons who are present at a meeting of their body duly constituted and vote on the question shall have and be deemed to have always had full power to execute and do all such assurances, acts, and things, as may be requisite for carrying any such sale, exchange, partition, mortgage, lease, or disposition into effect, and all such assurances, acts, and things shall have the same effect as if they were respectively executed and done by all such trustees or persons for the time being and by the official trustee of charity lands.

13. Legal proceedings by trustees of charities for protection of charity property, &c.—The majority of the trustees of any charity, if authorised by the board, may institute and maintain any action, suit, petition, or other proceeding in the same manner in all respects as if they were the sole trustees of the charity.

Where the trustees, or the majority of the trustees, of any charity institute and maintain any action, suit, petition, or other proceeding under the authority of the board, such action, suit, petition, or other proceeding shall not abate or become discontinued or of no effect by reason of the death or removal from office of any of the trustees, or of the addition of any new trustee, but shall continue and have effect for and against the trustees for the time being of the charity, in the same manner as if they were actually named therein.

14. Application by exempted charities to have benefit of act (see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, s. 3).—Either the trustees or the persons acting in the administration of any charity exempted from the operation of "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869," may apply to the board to have the said acts or any provisions thereof specified in the application extended to such charity: Such application shall be made by such of the said trustees or persons as having regard to the value of the charity might under the provisions of the said acts, if the charity were not exempted therefrom, make an application for a scheme to any judge or court or to the board, and shall be made in the same manner and according to the same regulations as such application.

On any such application the board may make an order directing that the said acts or any provisions of them specified in the application shall extend, and such acts or provisions shall thereupon after the date of the order extend to such charity in the same manner as if it were not exempted therefrom.

Before making any order under this section the board shall cause such notices of the proposed order to be given as by section three of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," as amended by this act, and by section six of the same act are required to be given before the making of an order for establishing a scheme.

15. Extension of part of acts to registered places of religious worship.—So much of "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869," as authorises and relates to orders of the board for the appointment or removal of trustees of a charity, or for or relating to the vesting of any real or personal estate belonging thereto, or for the establishment of any scheme for the administration of any charity, shall extend to buildings registered as places of meeting for religious worship with the Registrar-General of Births, Deaths, or Marriages in England, and bona fide used as places of meeting for religious worship: Provided that no such order shall be made except upon the application of the trustees or persons acting in the administration of the charity, made in manner provided by section four of "The Charitable Trusts Act, 1860," or by this act. Save as provided by this section, such buildings shall continue exempted from "The Charitable Trusts Acts, 1853 to 1869."

16. Treasury to fix scale of fees.—Scale to be laid before Parliament.—The Lords Commissioners of Her Majesty's Treasury may from time to time prescribe a scale of fees to be charged for any business done by the board under this or any other act, and may direct whether the same shall be imposed by stamps or otherwise, and by whom and in what manner the same shall be collected, accounted for, and appropriated; and before any such fees shall be taken or received by the said Charity Commissioners every such scale of fees shall be published in the London Gazette. The scale of fees shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within thirty days after the same has been so prescribed if Parliament is then sitting, and if not, within thirty days after the then next meeting of Parliament; and if any such scale shall be disapproved of by both Houses of Parliament within one month after the same shall have been so laid before Parliament, such fees or such parts thereof as shall be disapproved of shall not be charged by the board.

17. Repeal.—The enactments described in the schedule to this act are hereby repealed; provided that,

Cap. 110.

Cap. 110.

- (1) This repeal shall not affect anything already done or suffered, or any right acquired or order made, under such enactments:
- (2) Any proceedings already commenced under the enactments hereby repealed shall be proceeded with in the same manner as if this repeal had not been made.

An Act for the Relief of Archbishops and Bishops when incapacitated by Infirmary.—[11th August, 1869.]

ADULTERATION OF SEEDS ACT.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 112.

Cap. 112.

An Act to prevent the Adulteration of Seeds.—[11th August, 1869.]

Whereas the practice of adulterating seeds, in fraud of Her Majesty's subjects, and to the great detriment of agriculture, requires to be repressed by more effectual laws than those which are now in force for that purpose:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Title of act.—This act may be cited as "The Adulteration of Seeds Act, 1869."

2. Interpretation of terms.—In this act—

The term "to kill seeds" means to destroy by artificial means the vitality or germinating power of such seeds:

The term "to dye seeds" means to give to seeds by any process of colouring, dyeing, sulphur smoking, or other artificial means the appearance of seeds of another kind.

3. Offences in relation to seeds.—Every person who, with intent to defraud or to enable another person to defraud, does any of the following things; that is to say,

- (1.) Kills or causes to be killed any seeds; or,
- (2.) Dyes or causes to be dyed any seeds; or,
- (3.) Sells or causes to be sold any killed or dyed seeds, shall be punished as follows; that is to say,

- (1.) For the first offence he shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds;
- (2.) For the second and any subsequent offence he shall be liable to pay a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds:

Moreover, in every case of a second or any subsequent offence against this act, it shall be lawful for the court, besides inflicting upon the person guilty of such offence the punishment directed by this act, to order the offender's name, occupation, place of abode, and place of business, and particulars of his punishment under this act, to be published, at the expense of such offender, in such newspaper or newspapers, or in such other manner as the court may think fit to prescribe.

4. Summary proceedings for offences, penalties, &c.—Any forfeiture or penalty under this act may be recovered, enforced, and applied as follows:

In England, before two justices of the peace in manner directed by the act of the session of the eleventh and twelfth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter forty-three, intitled "An Act to facilitate the Performance of the Duties of Justices of the Peace out of Sessions within England and Wales with respect to summary Convictions and Orders," and any act amending the same:

In Scotland, in manner directed by "The Summary Procedure Act, 1864," and any act amending the same, or by any police or other act for the time being in force in any place, and providing for the recovery of forfeitures and penalties:

In Ireland, in manner directed by "The Petty Sessions (Ireland) Act, 1851," and any act amending the same; and in Dublin by the acts regulating the powers of justices of the peace, or of the police of Dublin metropolis.

Any jurisdiction by this section authorised to be exercised by two justices may be exercised by any of the following magistrates within their respective jurisdictions; that is to say,

As to England, by any metropolitan police magistrate sitting alone at a police court or other appointed place, or by the Lord Mayor or any alderman of the City of London, sitting alone or with others within the said city:

As to Scotland, by the sheriff or sheriff substitute, or by any police magistrate of a burgh:

As to Ireland, by any one or more divisional magistrate of police in the police district of Dublin, and elsewhere by one or more justice or justices of the peace in petty sessions.

The term "court" shall include the justices, magistrates, or other person or persons before whom proceedings may be had for the recovery of any forfeiture or penalty.

5. Intent to defraud particular person need not be alleged.—In any proceeding for any offence against this act, it shall be sufficient to allege that the party accused did the act charged with intent to defraud or to enable some other person to defraud, without alleging an intent to defraud any particular person or an intent to enable any particular person to defraud any particular person; and on the trial of any such offence it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to defraud any particular person or an intent to enable any particular person to defraud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to defraud or with intent to enable some other person to defraud, or with the intent that any other person might be enabled to defraud.

6. Appeal from summary conviction.—In England where the person who is convicted under this act thinks himself aggrieved by the conviction, such person may appeal to the next court of general or quarter sessions, held not less than twelve days after the day of such conviction for the county or place where the conviction is had, in manner and upon the conditions in and upon which a person aggrieved by a summary conviction under the act of the session of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, chapter ninety-six, may appeal in pursuance of the one hundred and tenth section of the said act.

In Scotland and Ireland, in like cases as in England, an appeal shall lie in manner in that behalf provided by the law of Scotland and of Ireland respectively.

A summary conviction under this act in England shall not be quashed for want of form or be removed by certiorari; and a warrant of commitment on any such conviction shall not be held void by reason of any defect therein, if it is therein alleged that the person therein named has been convicted, and there is a good conviction to sustain the same.

7. Limiting time for proceedings under this act.—Every complaint under this act against any person in respect of selling or causing to be sold any killed or dyed seeds shall be commenced within twenty-one days from the time of the commission of the offence complained of.

8. Court may order prosecutor to pay costs of unreasonable prosecution.—Whenever any complaint is preferred against any person under this act, and the court upon the hearing thereof determines that it is not bonâ fide made upon reasonable and probable cause, it shall be lawful for the court in its discretion to direct and order that the prosecutor or other person by whom or at whose instance such complaint has been preferred shall pay unto the accused person the just and reasonable costs, charges, and expenses, to be settled by the court, of such accused person and his witnesses, occasioned by or consequent upon the preferring of such complaint; and upon nonpayment of such costs, charges, and expenses within fourteen days after the date of such direction and order, it shall be lawful for the court to enforce payment of the same in the same manner as if such costs were a penalty incurred by the person liable to pay the same.

9. Other remedies not to be affected.—Nothing in this act contained shall prejudice or affect the power of proceeding by indictment or libel in respect of any offence herein provided for, nor shall any proceeding, conviction, or judgment to be had or taken under the provisions hereof against any person prevent, lessen, or impeach any remedy by civil process at law or in equity which any party aggrieved by any offence against this act might have had if this act had not been passed.

10. Commencement of act.—This act shall commence and take effect on the first day of May, one thousand eight hundred and seventy.

32 & 33 VICT. CAP. 117.

Cap. 117.

An Act to amend "The Pharmacy Act, 1868."
[11th August, 1869.]

Whereas it is expedient to amend the provisions of "The Pharmacy Act, 1868," in regard to duly qualified medical practitioners and veterinary surgeons, and in other respects:

Be it enacted by the Queen's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Sect. 1. Reserving rights of certain persons.—Nothing contained in the first fifteen sections of the recited act shall affect any person who has been registered as a legally qualified medical practitioner before the passing of this act; and the said clauses shall not apply to any person who may hereafter be registered as a legally qualified practitioner, and who, in order to obtain his diploma for such registration, shall have passed an examination in pharmacy; nor shall the said clauses prevent any person who is a member of the Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons of Great Britain, or holds a certificate in veterinary surgery from the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland, from dispensing medicines for animals under his care.

2. Period within which certificates under sect. 4 of recited act to be produced to registrar.—The time within which certificates may be produced to the registrar under section four of the said act, by persons employed as assistants before the passing of the said act, shall be extended to the thirty-first day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and the certificates given under the same section according to Schedule (A.) of this act shall be sufficient.

3. Excepting medicine supplied by a legally qualified medical man.—Nothing contained in section seventeen of the said recited act shall apply to any medicine supplied by a legally qualified medical practitioner to his patient or dispensed by any person registered under the said act, provided such medicine be distinctly labelled with the name and address of the seller, and the ingredients thereof be entered, with the name of the person to whom it is sold or delivered, in a book to be kept by the seller for that purpose.

4. Section 23 and Schedule (E.) repealed.—Section 23 and Schedule (E.) of the said recited act are hereby repealed.

5. Schedule (F.) amended.—Schedule (F.) of the said recited act is hereby altered by substituting for the second column headed "Name of Purchaser" a column headed "Name and Address of Purchaser."
